Michael Newton will replace the retired Dan Bieker, who was the second candidate interviewed for the position. Bieker served as the assistant chief for community, collaboration, communication and transparency during his time with the department.

Newton has also been involved in higher education law enforcement for 18 years and served as a faculty member and captain at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Newton is also the president of the Wisconsin National Alliance of Mutual Mutuals, NAMI. He earned a criminal justice degree from Marquette University, Milwaukee Wisconsin, a master's degree in administration of justice from the University of Louisville, Kentucky, and a Ph.D. in business administration from Northern Kentucky University, Proctor, Arizona. In his role as captain at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, Brown has been promoted to his current position, which included approximately 100 officers and employees.

"Mike brings strong experience in community collaboration and workforce development," said State Rep. Kristy Pate, a member of the Iowa City police department. "Mike has been on the job for a long time and is experienced in his role. He is a great fit for this position."

Rock Your Body promotes positivity, self-love

By Jake Dalhov

Lose yourself a little more meaning that for some is a cornerstone of this life, but for others, it can be as close to the facade of a smile keeps them from fully engaging life. Those barriers come in forms of depression, anxiety, eating disorders and many other mental health conditions, but they all share a similar if not identical symptoms that can stem from the same source.

The ISU Body Image and Eating Disorders Awareness group, also known as BIE-DA, is hoping to eliminate one of the frequent causes associated with mental health and help people find the means to love themselves.

The ISU BIeda hosted one of several events associated with the Eating Disorders Awareness Week on Thursday, in the Memorial Union Center and the Valley Ballroom, where the gathering provided food, music and resources for several health-related organizations. “We spread awareness of eating disorders as well as promote positive body image as well as self-love for everyone,” BIE-DA president Candyce Boyle said.

Boyle had food to stress that food is not the enemy.

“Boe said. “It was a way to say you can have fun and get to know one another,” Boe said.

McGuire said. “Right now we're looking to see what we can focus on for the fall semester.”

Iowa State’s BIE-DA chapter begins in lines, a fact that Boe hopes will bring awareness to the University of Iowa and the University of Northern Iowa. “We are meeting with other people to establish a network of support. We would like to start our own group, hopefully to give us ideas and collaboration,” Boe said.

Boe encourages those who want to help spread awareness to plan an event. “It’s not a way to only plan events move on as it is about raising awareness and issues to join BEIDA as a representative of the early American activist, community organizer, workshop facilitator, and poet. She first became an accomplished speaker as a representative of the early American Indian Movement’s “We Will Remember” Survival School on the Pine Ridge reservation.

Iowa State looks to carry momentum into Big 12 Tournament

By Aaron Marner

11-7 Big 12) on Saturday at the Big 12 Tournament in Oklahoma City. Johnson will be leading his first career win at the Big 12 Tournament.

“We'd rather have it outright and do it our way, we have a chance to make that positive experience for the returning wrestlers. The Big 12 Tournament is a bit different for this team. The Cyclones started its regular season on a five-game winning streak, whereas last season they ended the regular season on a five-game losing streak. We've had our ups and downs this season, but we've ended the regular season with a win. That 2013-14 team, coincidentally, went two games at the Big 12 Tournament.

Point guard Jadda Buckley said the team is looking at the Big 12 Tournament as a way to solidify their NCAA Tournament hopes. "We have a really good team that can do anything they want. They were our last loss and our five-game winning streak, so I think this is kind of a little motivation. We're just playing at a higher level now. Our game style has changed," Buckley said. Sophomore Beijing Carlson, who was recently unanimously selected to the All-Big 12 first team, pointed to Iowa State's win at West Virginia as a turning point in the season. "When you start off 1-5 in the Big 12's never a good thing," Carlson said. "We were so close as in so many of those games and that doesn't do anything but hurt your confidence."

"Getting that win at West Virginia ... that kind of sets the bar and then we're able to see how far we can go from there," Carlson said.

The seniors are obviously huge," Carver said. "They're going to be a big part of our team and that doesn't do anything but hurt your confidence."

Jokes. Georges Niang, a former player who has made Mitrou-Long dub her “one of the biggest aids she provides the program is someone who “does everything 110 percent,” Cross says she is “the life support of this program.”

“Her quick recall and relationships with alumni have also given her a role of “team historian.” Prohm said that one of the biggest aids she provides the program is having connection with alumni and other support figures. One of the more unique roles that time played a factor was with Fred Hoiberg. In 2010, when Hoiberg was searching for a new coach, a friend of hers in the athletic department told her, “I can’t wait for him to get to Iowa City.”

When Julie heard that Hoiberg would be interviewing for a position at Iowa, Julie sat in the back between front and center. Julie was laughing.

“At the game was the biggest deal,” she laughed. After, Jackson went over and congratulated her. “I think she’s the top kid support of this program.”

And though her role and personality of someone who “does everything 110 percent,” Cross puts it, has not changed over the years, what she does has changed. One might imagine that would happen with eight different leagues, a program that has gone from little known to a national entity that becomes a huge business. “Her role has evolved from that one year she’s probably had a different role every year and those of us who’ve been in the business for a long time realize how hard a huge business. “Her role has evolved from that one year she’s probably had a different role every year and those of us who’ve been in the business for a long time realize how hard
