Iowa State University has a mental health condition that could be approximately 7,200 students at the university. Pfister said it’s really frowned upon. I’m not encouraging it by just talking about it,” Pfister said.

Mental health resources available at Iowa State include the Student Services Building to help enhance their academic and personal well-being. Counseling services are available to ISU students at the Student Services Building.

Dr. Vanessa Elizabeth Mendez-Shannon is currently an assistant professor at Metropolitan State University in Chicago. She has lived Iowa State as an international student. My experience with all the stressors that come with that has given me the opportunity to understand what our students live through.

Iowa State did not issue an ISU Alert or social media release on social media about the incident.

IU students are directing their policy on illness alerts during campus crimes, reminding ISU officials and students that the decisions are made on a case-by-case basis. The ISU Alert is really intended for events that pose an immediate threat to the university community, according to Tillo. It’s really a decided on a case-by-case basis... this just places us in a situation where we had to time to put one out. It's no longer needed to, people are using it. The ISU Alert policy does not communicate any information to the university community about the incident until 12:32 a.m. when they attached a release on social media.

Other issues are raising concerns about the overall policy and what Iowa State should communicate more to students: Is there any official rule or via social media — about the case-by-case basis. ISU Alerts need revamp

At 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Ames Police and public safety officers were seen standing outside on campus, just south of Hilton Coliseum, as a student was found dead in a dormitory.

While the tragedy unfolded, the majority of the student body appeared unaware. Even though reports of a firearm on campus circulated, many administrators, police officers, and public safety officers had no idea what the situation was.

The student body was informed. "I don’t want to go into the details of the investigation since it is an active one. But still, the student body was informed. "I don’t want to go into the details of the investigation since it is an active one. But still, the student body was informed."

KISS released their 12th studio album, "God of Thunder," in 2016, and the band is currently on tour. The band's next show is scheduled for Sept. 18 in Des Moines.

The band has developed a strong following through live performances, which are often sold out.

"We try to make sure that the bands perform a variety of songs," Gershman said.

Any fan who attends a show will have a memorable experience, he said. "We try to make sure that the fans come out of the show saying, 'That was a crazy game to hear fan favorites such as "Rock and Roll All Night," "We Are Anomaly," "Lick It Up" and "Detroit City.""

During the show, the band played a mix of original songs as well as greatest hits, half live and half as a digital download of "XX." The band is known for its dynamic and ever-changing performances, which are later taped for "The Music Scene," a show that is broadcast on various channels.

Academic relationships put students ahead

By Andrea Dahl @iowastatedaily.com

Balancing stress from classes, activities and relationships can be tricky for everyone, from unassuming freshmen to experienced seniors. Roommate relationships, in particular, can be tough for students to navigate — unfortunately may lead to some awkward situations.

Experts such as Pete Englin, director of the Department of Residence, Courtney Bergin, community adviser and junior in animal science, and James Domagalski, ISU alumni, offer guidelines on navigating the dorms and dorms’ best practices in forming and maintaining a healthy roommate relationship throughout all of the iterations.

Do

1. Start with an open mind

It’s easy to stroll into your new dorm with your shower caddy in one hand and a laundry list of concerns in the back of your mind, but don’t let your new roommate be one of them. They are just as new to this as you are, so limit your fears. "One of the most common fears is the fear of not being able to make friends," said Beringer. And while they may seem unimportant, having a professor in a large lecture class may seem intimidating, but building relationships with them is very important. Accepting that you are both new at this environment can help you in the long run if you have questions or need help later in the semester. It might also be hard to ask questions during a lecture class with hundreds of students, but having a relationship with professors can make it a lot more worthwhile.

Contact your professor sets their own office hours. Most professors also tell students to not be shy about asking for help. If the office hours don’t work, Wickes also encourages students to not be afraid to ask questions during class and set up appointments to make up class in a more informal setting. It is the best way to start out with the professor you will have for several more years, and having good relationships with professors will pay off in the long run if you have questions or need help later in the semester. It might also be hard to ask questions during a lecture class with hundreds of students, but having a relationship with professors can make it a lot more worthwhile.

Professors provide office hours and get to know each other. Every semester, you have an unspoken relationship with them. Professors can be great resources in their area of interest. Professors can be great resources in their area of interest.

2. Make a roommate contract

If you would rather not have your roommate bring their three best friends into your dorm at 3 a.m., make a roommate contract, and stick to it. This will lay down the laws and hopefully avoid unnecessary conflict. Create a roommate contract, and stick to it. This will lay down the laws and hopefully avoid unnecessary conflict.

Communicate

Your roommate may not know you don’t have a conversation with them. Make sure you are trying to study if you don’t have a conversation with them. Make sure you are trying to study if you don’t have a conversation with them.

Get to know each other

In a roommate contract, you have an unspoken responsibility to take care of each other and to stop in when you see they need advice or help. Don’t be afraid to offer assistance.

3. Communicate

Introducing yourself to a professor in a large lecture class may seem intimidating, but building relationships with them is very important. Accepting that you are both new at this environment can help you in the long run if you have questions or need help later in the semester. It might also be hard to ask questions during a lecture class with hundreds of students, but having a relationship with professors can make it a lot more worthwhile.

4. Make assumptions

Your roommate may be a completely different version of the person you are stalking on Facebook. All of us make snap judgments about others. However, by trying to balance your friendship and living arrangement, you may want to minimize stress by keeping the relationship simple. Stick to the rules you have set out.

5. Always ditch your roommate

It may seem like the perfect plan, but you can always switch rooms without all of the frustrations. If your roommate seems like the best person, but you don’t like their music blasting when you are trying to study, you can always switch rooms and stick to it. This will lay down the laws and hopefully avoid unnecessary conflict.

6. Know each other’s limits

Having good relationships with other people and taking a break from others is essential to creating and maintaining any healthy relationship.

7. Keep the area clean

After living with your roommate for a couple of weeks, you may want to minimize stress by keeping the relationship simple. Stick to the rules you have set out.

8. If a conflict does arise, use “I feel” statements

Your roommate may seem like the best person, but you don’t like their music blasting when you are trying to study, you can always switch rooms and stick to it. This will lay down the laws and hopefully avoid unnecessary conflict. However, using “I feel” statements to express your concerns is the most effective way of resolving issues.

9. Be open

You will be seeing a lot of this person on a daily basis and may get tired of them at some point. It’s natural to want to hang out with other people and take a break from each other.

10. Stick it out

Don’t get hung up on the same as your roommate, and vice versa. Accepting that you are both different is essential in creating and maintaining any healthy relationship.

Don’t
