Students showcase engineering designs

Horse Hall was buzzing with activity Tuesday as students from three different mechanical engineering classes, ME 270, ME 415 and ME 466, showed off projects they've worked on during the fall semester.

The projects from those in the sophomore-level class differed greatly from those in the junior and senior-level classes, but each required a large amount of work. The projects from ME 270 were made with the goal to direct toward solving various struggles in developing countries.

Sam Fletcher, sophomore in mechanical engineering, and Josh Goldsmith, junior in mechanical engineering, chose to work on a water wheel, a device that could be used to create small amounts of energy, as they worked on a project designed for use in the Democratic Republic of Congo. The wheel would be placed in a body of moving water, such as a creek, and carry water to a bucket, speeding up the water collection process.

They could use the water in applications for making water, overall improving the health in the area, Fletcher said.

Another project focused on helping the country of Mongolia, where people don’t have access to electricity and some of the people we wanted to make something that would help in different locations. They are doing work in mechanical engineering and member of the group.

For the most part, the sophomore-level projects were done in theory, designs that could possibly help humans in various places. Some practical designs, however, had the ability to be implemented.

The senior-level projects are for real-world applications, for real businesses and industries that apply today. These projects encompass a

With 1,400 current students—number that grows each semester—the Honors Program allows access to a unique community among students. And while many students may skip over the program, most don't know exactly what it is.

Incoming first-year students are able to apply to the First-Year Honors Program (FYP) and the University Transfer Honors Program (UTHP) available to current Iowa State students, transfer students and current high school students. The main idea of the honors programs can be seen as a rivotton builder, there are other means immediate benefits to joining an honors program. Iowa State has various departments on campus to ensure that students have the resources they need. In this case study, the author focuses on the Story County sexual assault response team (SART) and the steps they take to ensure that their patients receive the help they need. The case study describes how SART provides a multidisciplinary approach to managing sexual assault cases, and how they work as a team to provide the best possible care for their patients. The author emphasizes the importance of the resources that exist and the need to continue supporting them. The case study also highlights the importance of being connected to the people, and the need to stay close to their patients to ensure they receive the help they need.

Falalala fails over Winter Break

By Kennedy Plowman #iowastatedaily.com

Falalala fails over Winter Break. It had burned in the snow, and the cousins and I saw it and we thought he killed Rudolph.

"I arrived during Silent Night" at our Christmas Eve party to surprise our friend, freshman in business.

"When I was 5 years old, my mom gave me a snow over Christmas Break. It had burned in the snow, and the cousins and I saw it and we thought he killed Rudolph."

Emily O’Brien, freshman in kinesiology and health.

"Last year at our family Christmas we gave my 5-year-old nephew a double snow tube, which is where you would load their bag pack so their feet get strapped in under the snow. We started the tradition so they didn’t get too tired and we were able to get them up these hills from one of our whole family."

Zoe Dillman, freshman in agricultural studies.

"We traveled to New Mexico for Christmas vacation and we had a snow day on Christmas Eve."

"So we traveled to the town and every single pizzeria was closed. We had only eaten a snickers bar for Christmas Eve."

"We went back to the cabin and I found one bag of uncooked macaroni and cheese in the microwave and I ended up burning it. Needless to say we are absolutely nothing on Christmas Eve. I still have to admit about it."

-Louie Kugel, freshman in agricultural studies.

"On Christmas morning the sun shone on their faces and I had a cut on my nose for all of our family pictures."

-Emily O’Brien, freshman in kinesiology and health.

"I was 7 years old, super excited to open presents on Christmas Eve, wearing this adorable long red sweater’s fang. I screamed toward the store gifts and I slipped on my nightgown and the toe and fell down the entire flight of stairs. My parents had to rush us to the emergency room, and I didn’t even get to open the presents."

-Nina Ford, junior in public relations.

"One Christmas season my dad and I dressed head to toe in black all to protect the true joy from the highway at 2 a.m. We got home and it was injured."

-Sophia Brown, freshman in animal science.

"We stopped along an old highway and cut down a dead pine next to a farm fence and threw it on the top of our vehicle."

"Comes to us to set up, but since we prepared it up we realized we cut it totally ruined and the righthand had to walk a chain saw the next day."

-Emma Ferguson, freshman, undecided.

Iowa State students shared stories of their worst nightmares and fails during the holiday while spending time with family and friends. Emily O’Brien, freshman in kinesiology and health, said when she was a 5-year-old, her aunt shocked her Christmas Break. It had burned in the snow, and the cousins and I saw it and we thought he killed Rudolph.

"Everyone is going to have a few minutes every game. When you aren’t able to do anything, it’s definitely hard, but you’ll get used to it," Young said.

Going forward, coach Steve Prohm said he expects Young to be at full speed for practices and games. That will be a big benefit for Young, who has been held back by the injury. Young also said he had already headed back, so "I was surprised." Although Young missed the entire second half of Iowa State’s season will be returning sophomore Meaghan Sievers. Iowa State wrestler Colston DiBlasi works for a turn at the Harold Nichols Cyclone Open on Nov. 13. In his last eight wins, he has six pins.

Iowa State kicker Cole Netten was named to the Associated Press’ All-Big 12 First Team on Tuesday. He was the lone Cyclone named to the All-Big 12 teams.

Netten, who just wrapped up his junior year, ranged 16-17 on his field goal try average and has a 93.3 percent success rate. He knocked in two field goals from 49 yards or more, with a long of 55 yards.

Despite the overwhelming success, Netten hasn’t shown a deep interest in playing football beyond college, saying he would take the NFL route if it was presented to him.

“If the opportunity is there, I could probably ride it out,” Netten said before planning Oklahoma as his next destination. “It could just not be something that’s going to heartbreak me, that’s for sure. But if it’s there, I’ll probably take it.”

Netten may be remembered as one of the best kickers in Iowa State history. He finished his career as the program’s all-time scoring leader and was twice given All-Big 12 honors after accumulating All-Big 12 honorable mentions in 2014 and 2015. He made 57 field goals that would’ve given Iowa State wins over Texas Tech and Oklahoma.

DiBlasi's funky style leads to success on mat

By Luke Manderfeld

Nobody wrestlers like Iowa State's Colston DiBlasi. His style of wrestling is, unnerving to others, and it's different. The "DiBlasification" wrestling, as his high school coach put it, is it's "DiBlasification."

"I can stand fundamentally strong. I have great hand light. I have all that stuff," DiBlasi said. "When we get to the mat, you get in on my leg, that's where the birds and the bees can change."

DiBlasi doesn't necessarily let guys get on his leg, but he doesn't do it to discourage it either. DiBlasi likes to scramble, and even his scramble is unique. High school wrestling created a one person wrass lehold and that's DiBlasi's scramble through all of the positions. That's where DiBlasi learns how to scramble.

"That's what I do now, too," DiBlasi said. "Just get in position. I love wrestling and I love creating wrestling positions. You can get to scramble through all of them and just don't stop."

And odds are once DiBlasi gets on top, he and his opponent are in such a weird position, DiBlasi's able to lock up a cradle. In a weird position, DiBlasi's second around from there — just depends.

DiBlasi learned the DiBlasi scramble through trial and error.

"You can learn how to shoot a double-leg in a week or so," DiBlasi said. "This is something that took years, years of going through in practice — practice, prac tice."

At this point in time, I've tried a lot of things, I've failed a lot of things, but I know the things that work and the things that don't."

Coaches get Jacksds said they're practicing pretty little bit more of a convers aional takedown but there's a lot of very nice style wars, but he needs to make sure to make guys work to get to DiBlasi.

"How far do we let that funk gok?" Jackson asked. "Do we let it go to the level he was doing in high school, so we do kind of refine it? I think he refined it perfectly for the [Wyoming] dual meet. His head and his shoulders while he's on top pressure on his opponent's shoulders while he's on top."

Jackson also gets nervous watching DiBlasi wrestle, but he enjoys the DiBlasi scramble. He rates high on his opponent's performance, mentioning his style.

"I feel just fine when I'm riding high on my leg."

If we can continue to refine him a little bit in the better wrestlers in the country, he can fall back to that funky style. DiBlasi even DiBlasifies his style of wrestling.

Jackson said it's fun to watch DiBlasi wrestle, but he also gets nervous watching him scramble.

"Funky is a bad word (a de nial, not a reference)." DiBlasi's style is unique, and DiBlasi himself thinks he's made the DiBlasi scramble just because it makes me feel like I made something."

Despite his overwhelming success, Netten hasn't shown a deep interest in playing football beyond college, saying he would take the NFL route if it was presented to him.

"I'm into wrestling," Netten said. "I feel just fine when I'm riding on top."

Despite being a 157-pound wrestler, he's able to lock up a cradle. In a weird position, Netten has eight pins among his last eight wins, six have been by fall. He has eight field goals this season.

Each student who comes into SCS fills out our information on the computer. If the student summarizes anything about assault in this information, they will be matched with a therapist who specializes in assault cases.

Bueling explained that they hope to catch it right away, but if the student does not just anything about the assault, they may not be put with a therapist immediately in the eight-week program.

Bueling explained that if the counselor is in one of the few places that does not have to report the assault because they offer 100 percent confidentiality, or if the student mentions on campus where the assault has to be automatically reported.

Five things to take home and bring back from break

With the negative winds and snow on the ground, and most of us in include the excitement of gift giving, good food and time spent with those you love most.

To avoid spending too long getting ready, here is a quick and easy hairstyle that can be dressed up or down for any holiday festivities.

Step 1: Curl your hair loosely with a curling wand. You can either curl your hair in tight curls and deep in loops or loosen it, or you can curl each piece for about six seconds and then brush out curls when finished. Straight/wavy hair also will work.

Step 2: Grab a section of hair from one side of your head. This section should be in the middle of your head instead of the very front.

Step 3: Divide the hair you have your cut from and bring it to your face. In order to bring the hair to your face, you can use a hair pin to pin the hair out of the way. Once you have this hair out of the way, you can then work on the hair that is left.

Step 4: To add curls, you can use a curling wand. This look could also be finished with a flat iron. You can then pin the curls together and set them in place while we braid the hair. This look is perfect for any holiday festivities.

Step 5: Once the hair is braided, you can either leave the hair down or you can pin the braid to the side. This look is also perfect for any holiday festivities.
