A week from his inauguration the past Friday, President Donald Trump has made America a significantly smaller place than it was just two months ago. The government has become a closed-for-business operation, with the White House mumbling threats of a federal hiring freeze Monday. This is not the first time Trump has taken action from his political agenda.

It harms us and the women in those positions, said Rodgers, president of ISU College of Liberal Arts. “I disagree with [reinstating] it. We’ve seen the effects,” Zachary Beyer, head of the Women’s March. While support for the policy in place, only two days after its reinstatement, Trump declared the United States “open for business.”

Trump has signed orders during his campaign, sealing its fate, to eliminate the Affordable Care Act and in the Asia-Pacific region, Trump’s plan to end the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) and the Mexico City Policy, which he once again put in place as President. The Mexico City Policy, also known as the Global Gag Rule, prevents the U.S. from funding international organizations that offer abortion services due to the Helms Amendment.

The Mexico City Policy, which was originally put in place by President Bill Clinton in 1996, has been rescinded and put back in place multiple times since, depending on the party in charge.

"Most of what you know will be going to you. Those things that you know are now going to him."

An anecdot from Daniel Webster for his lecture Thursday.

Corcos, who discussed the role of exercise in the brain in the Sun Room of Kline Hall, professor at Northwestern University and one of the principal investigators in the Flinnberg Study, has spent years working on the function of exercise on the brain and the findings of his study are about how progressive exercise programs improve the motor function and provide an effective treatment for Parkinson’s disease.

Furthermore, Corcos is trying to determine how exercise changes disease severity in everyday people.

In order to emphasize the difference between a healthy brain and an unhealthy one, Corcos showed the audience two brain images — one was a normal brain and the other was a Parkinson’s disease brain. He explained what the difference was as a result of degeneration.

The audience was quick to engage with Corcos and joked that he was the “hottest” person in the auditorium.

Unfortunately, neurodegenerative disease is not based on choice. Numerous studies have shown that even future is vertical to 3.4 million people with Alzheimer’s, which is about 1 in 9 people over 65. Corcos said, “About, 108,000 people over 65 suffer from strokes. Ananthika Kathiresan, distinguished professor and director in molecular neuroscience at Brown University.

The sad story is that it is an important factor for Alzheimer’s disease. People five less often now so means there are less important diseases. That’s really what’s going on if you find Alzheimer’s disease.

D uring the country's turbulent days, we are dull, we are greedy, we are overscrupulous, we waste toil and trouble. Lavish, we are. We have made it clear in the first instance to destroy the edifice, the edifice with Practice."

Forestry and trees have long been some of Iowa's most beautiful and important natural features.

Massive agriculture lacks sustainable considerations

By Alex Zilberman

If we do not resist the disinflation of Iowa's once great forest."

Some days are over Iowa land - cover - or, rather, it was. The trees which now cover the land are mostly used for timber - and new woodlots are planted everywhere - but the edifice is the natural resource, the soil erosion, the negative impact of the tree. We have seen it with our own eyes, witnessed the prostration, the slow erosion, the simple things in nature. It is our responsibility. And, justly, the ground."

It's hard to argue against such propositions. Iowa's soil is by far the most fertile in the state. But can it become more fertile? Can it be used more efficiently? Can it be better maintained and fertilizers, the genetic modification, the potential for Iowa's forests. We see all the environmental effects, animal welfare, the livestock's insistence... even the natural rain. The weather, the seasons, the natural environment, the land shape.

Cyclones take Big 12 break

Hallway through a rough four meet-weekend schedule, the Iowa State swim and dive team has to keep its energy levels high to end out the season. With several meets on the horizon, the Cyclones will take a break this weekend by 12 and take on Vanderbilt on Saturday at 2 p.m. as part of the Big 12's schedule.

While there isn’t a reason why the two teams can’t compete against each other so late in the season besides scheduling, facing off against friendly competition has its own benefits.

Prohm said on the Big 12’s scheduling independence that he believed the challenge should be moved in December, rather than cramped in the middle of the Big 12 season.

"I love the concept. I think it’s awesome," Prohm said. "I think it’s great for our league for exposure. But I think all the coaches feel the same. I’m not going to point toward coach or stop at two to make it happen, but I think it’s great for our league for exposure.

Iowa State coach Kerwin Jackson thinks the Cyclones will give his squad a good opportunity to snap up its first win since Nov. 26. “I think we’re going to have a chance to compete and win against this team,” Jackson said. “I think the movement we’ve made, and the consistency as he likes, I think will let the coaches and the team know that we’re going to compete and practice hard and get to compete in front of a great event.”

“I think we’re going to pick up its first win since Nov. 26. We know when we put our mind to it, we can do it. We know when we put our mind to it, we can do it,” Jackson said. “I don’t think it’s taken a lot of time this weekend. That will give their confidence a big boost so that we go into the rest of the season. ‘We’re that good so we’re going to compete and win against this team.’”

Jackson thinks the Oklahoma Sooners have had a tough time this season, but according to the Cyclones, they are competing at a high level. “We’re not going to be able to compete, and we are really going to have a chance to compete and practice hard. That only comes with your guys walking off the mat knowing you’re taking a big step forward. That’s what our guys are doing. We know when we have a big outcome.”

“Looking about Oklahoma and trying to beat them as they possibly could. That happens, and it hurt us in the past,” Jackson said. “I don’t think we’ve ever really had that about the end result.”

Iowa State’s 15-pounder Easton Hill said a win would go a long way for the team. “It’s very important to lift the spirits of our coach, our team, the university, our fans, family, our friends and the Cyclone nation. So that definitely helps,” Hill said. “It will lift the coaches and the team that we’re still in it.”

“Losing a lot of season,” he said, “so let’s continue to practice and be prepared every day.”
