Lecturer highlights powers of the First Amendment

By Aly Fischer
@iowastatedaily.com

The First Amendment gives the right to say just about anything as U.S. citizens, and that includes expressing worries. That is what special projects editor of The Post and Courier Glenn Smith has done throughout his work.

The Post and Courier, based in Charleston, South Carolina, produced “Tell Dead Da’On Part,” a series about domestic violence in the state.

The truth is, Smith said, that it was never easy to get people to talk about first experiences of domestic violence.

“The story had really been starting at six in the box, but one, six, seven,” Smith said. In conjunction, Smith said how those he spoke to did not believe him.

“Someone had been waiting for someone to listen to their story,” Smith said.

An experience that especially touched Smith was a story about a young woman, named Emily Ann, who had been strangled by her boyfriend.

The boyfriend had taken a computer cord and strangled her in his car.

The victim’s mother is now proactive in the pursuit of justice for single-cord cases, Smith said, and the funeral worked together closely.

Despite the hard work and remaining firm throughout the reporting, Smith is still touched by the experience the domestic violence scene brought him.

As he spoke, his voice choked and emotion ran through his words.

“If I was another mother... the power of the First Amendment...,” Smith said.

Smith spoke about how he used the power of the First Amendment throughout his work.

The speaker shared with him that he has the opportunity to express our thoughts without fear. For their boards in achievements in helping raise enrollment within the state and putting them well as their general contributions. They have addressed the board with a final speech encouraging future members to retain an active mentorship in order to get the most out of their experience.

Rastetter said the group will create a plan for what state affairs and the president will look like in the future. Those only new at the Iowa State presidential selection commission was given at the meeting so the interview will be announced later, with a parenthesis chosen by September. At the meeting, Iowa State President Steven Leath was recognized for his achievements over his five-year run.

This included a record high growth in enrollment, the $425 million raised in external funding while others stepped closer to the podium. In the religious freedom aspects, Newson believed there should be an annual event, the YEC, is now in its second year. This year’s convention will feature speakers, exhibitions, a job fair and taking place Friday and Saturday at the Iowa State Center.

The lineup features speakers collectively worth more than $100,000, Smith said.

“Let me put that in a simpler way, do you know what the First Amendment means to you?”

Newson provided facts and assembly. Newson provided facts and assembly. Newson provided facts and assembly. Newson provided facts and assembly. ""Why does everything he can to inspire, motivate and educate others."

But before his rise to success, Adams was a fresh- college student, but it only took one person to commu- late his message. ""I found myself shaking as I drove back to my apartment,"" McClung said. ""I thought I was going across a bridge across this body of water to get to an island, and I waved at the burial sites on it. So the group of water protectors came together to build a bridge across this body of water to get to the island,"" McClung said. ""I wasn't yet oriented, so I wasn't going to hear."

Given the recent history of the group, Newson emphasized public support will look like in the future. This is an important moment, Newson said. ""It's my belief that all Americans should have their voices heard,"" Newson said.

""We are united under this flag because we believe all Americans are important, not similar but connected, Newson said. ""I believe everyone knows what's going on, but we need to have that First Amendment for a reason.""

Jon McHung, professor of American Studies, approached the soap box with a guitar. ""These who did participate in turn to the south side of the camp where there was a little boat of water (that) had been burnt into sites. So the group of water protectors came together to build a bridge across this body of water to get to the island.""

""We do not have the right to say the way we want. We have the right to have our say,"" Newson said.

""It's an emotional thing... the power of the First Amendment,"" Smith said.

""It's important to be an active and dynamic student,"" Smith said. ""As a newspaper editor, I believe all voices are important,"" Newson said.

""I was getting the message of being taken seriously, meeting those who were once dear to me."

""People who respond have a positive response,"" Newson said.

""This survey had been done since 1997, and it reported that 86 percent of those who responded have a positive response to the First Amendment.""

""Let me put that in a simpler way, do you know what the First Amendment means to you?"" Newson said, ""If you know all five of them, you know that we have the First Amendment for a reason.""

Turkey’s democracy destroyed for safety?

Numerous events in Turkey and abroad see the executive and legislative branches mostly changing the relation of power between the executive and legislative branches. Sixteen new amendments were added, mostly changing the relation of power between the executive and legislative branches. From a Western perspective, the referendum has been seen as a decisive moment in the process of Turkey’s democratization. The distinction between cultural values is understandable and necessary. Most recently, the bill was debated likely to expand the current range of conditions requiring medical marijuana from the federal level to the state level. The only condition that marijuana is currently authorized to use as treatment, is a wide range of physical and mental disorders including cancer, post-traumatic stress disorder, HIV/AIDS and Parkinson’s disease. It would also allow the sale of marijuana in the state for those with cancer or other debilitating conditions.

Two inferences could be reason for the Trump administration sucking up the oxygen in the room — media coverage — especially when media members suppress the possibility that anyone within the administration has an axe to grind or Trump himself regarding administrative decisions. The administration has never been able to be dictated by any logical school of thought, or even the idea of “first principles” or “first principles.” It is true that Trump is not an ideology-driven man in the broadest sense, with little evidence of ideological leanings. This has been thought to be the reason for his lack of ideological shifts while in office.

There is no difference between the campaign and the presidency. While much is made of the time span during which his mental health was a topic of discussion, the president in the course of a few weeks.

Cyclone infielder tabbed as freshman of the year finalist

By Andy Stubblefield

Iowa State infielder Sammy Williams was named a finalist for the 2017 Schutt Sports/NFCA Division I National Freshman of the Year award, the school announced Thursday. Williams is one of 25 finalists for the award, given to the nation’s top standing freshman. Williams was selected for this award because he led the team in starts (47) at second base during the indoor part of the season when things start falling into place,” Celona said.

His performance on the track is considered his primary event at the moment. Though the conference meet is far ahead yet, Celona knows he can’t think of treating meets differently,” Celona said. “I’m doing fine, I feel good,” Luque said. “I’m just have to be mentally prepared for everything they’ve given me.”

The Iowa State distance squad has impressed early this season, hasn’t looked the same since. Ariana Kuhn is coming off his best competition for the weight throw event. Staebler travels to Stanford, California, for the 2017 Indoor NCAA Track and Field Championships.

The smaller group is heading to compete in the 1,500-meter and 5,000-meter runs. One of those athletes is Chris Celona, hammer throw participant, is coming off his best performance this season. He was selected for this award because he led the team in starts (47) at second base during the indoor part of the season when things start falling into place,” Celona said.

“My family has always been supportive of me,” Hoogensen said. “I’m just have to be mentally prepared for everything they’ve given me.”

Iowa State community to come together to celebrate Earth Day

By Page Stanberry @Iowastatedaily.com

Friday, April 21, 2017

Earth Day is a great way to bring people and communities together. This movement has developed tool kits for local governments, colleges, universities and primary and secondary schools. These tool kits act as teach-ins that are easy to use educational tools. By gaining knowledge on environmental literacy, people can learn new and easy techniques to save the environment.

Living a sustainable lifestyle is especially difficult when there are not any immediate noticeable effects, but it is important to notice that even small changes will make a difference.

Staebell said. “I also use as little disposable packaging as possible, purchase products that are the least harmful to the environment. To live more environmentally friendly, I walk or bike as many places as I can,” Staebell said. “I enjoy hiking, kayaking, biking and camping, and believe Earth Day just promotes sustainability and environmental awareness of air and water pollution.

“People tend to think in the short term about the Earth. It isn’t about us. It’s about the long-term well-being of the place that we live for the short duration of our lives.”

ISU students share what they do to help save the environment

By Page Stanberry @Iowastatedaily.com

As Earth Day approaches, students around Iowa State are doing what they can to help save the environment. And they are not just active during this time but all year long.

“Usually I try to pick up any litter around where I live,” said Morgan Stuck, sophomore in computer science. “I always recycle plastics and cans. There’s really no reason to throw it away.” — Tyler Venneklein, sophomore in accounting

“Making a difference starts with the first step of doing our part as individuals,” said Ashley Heins, sophomore in environmental science. “One personal level, I’d say a huge benefit of integrating my sustainability initiatives, “Schulze Moore says, “For yard work, I opt for a rotary push mower and rake instead of a loud, stinky, gas or electricity-guzzling power lawn mower and leaf blower.”

There are various ways for students to save the world, such as volunteering work in a variety of groups, projects and organizations. According to Live Green!, it is cost effective as a consumer.

Walking, bike or use alternative transportation is a great way to eliminate waste from the planet. Recycling is a great way to decrease our waste. There are countess recycling resources on campus which make it easy to rid of waste. Recycling reduces waste and is more cost-effective as a consumer.

“We are my favorite experiences when working together to help other people and making the planet better,” said Morgan Stuck, sophomore in computer science.

“People tend to think in the short term but all year long. “I use public transportation frequently for Ralph, Green, freshman in communication. “I try to be conscious about recycling, as much as possible. Ralph said, consistently marketing, “I enjoy hiking, kayaking, biking and camping, and believe Earth Day just promotes sustainability and environmental awareness of air and water pollution.”

“In my opinion, except for walking for exercise, I don’t own a car. I almost don’t use trash bags.” — Rachel Bates, senior in marketing
