Introduction

Ease in locating hospitality and tourism journals is of interest to hospitality and tourism professionals, graduate students, researchers, and scholars. At present, there is no one location with concise information regarding hospitality and tourism journal descriptions, editors, and contact information. The matrix that follows contains a compiled list of hospitality and tourism journals along with pertinent journal information.

Methodology

A comprehensive list of hospitality and tourism journals currently published in English was created utilizing work by Ryan (2005), a popular journal website (www.alastairmorrison.com/journal\_01.htm) and a review of reference lists for all research articles printed in two recent issues of both the Journal of Hospitality and Tourism Education (2004, 2005) and the Journal of Hospitality and Tourism Research (2005, 2006).

Journals with content primarily focusing on nutrition, food science, food technology, or culinary arts were excluded. Although it is recognized that hospitality and tourism overlap with these areas, they were excluded to make the matrix more manageable. A separate matrix is being prepared for these journals. Exclusively business focused journals have also been omitted for a similar reason.

After the journal list was compiled, web searches ensued. Information on journal descriptions, editors, number of issues per journal, and contact information were gathered. Researchers cross checked information with sources such as journal publisher websites and journal editors when information was unavailable or conflicting.

Limitations

Because all source information is electronic, it is noted that websites do change and therefore current web addresses may no longer be accurate in the future. Additionally, due to changes in journal editors, this information may become obsolete. Phone, fax, and email contact information have not been included for all journals if they were not available on the official journal website. Researchers have attempted to include at least one mode of contacting the editor or publisher for every journal.

Any new journals started after November, 2006 will not be reflected in the matrix. Such a journal is International Journal of Tourism Policy. This matrix will not assist hospitality and tourism who disseminate research through journals published in languages other than English.

Applications

There are many potential uses for the matrix. It can be integrated into a graduate-level seminar course in hospitality and/or tourism. Students enrolled will be exposed to the gamut of available hospitality and tourism literature, in an organized manner. This matrix alleviates the decision making process for manuscript submissions, for tenured and tenure-track faculty alike. Journal descriptions should help faculty find the appropriate journal to disseminate research. Most of the links provided discuss manuscript submission guidelines. This may reduce the number of inquiries received by editors, thus resulting in more efficient use of their time. Many of the source indications link to journals and search capabilities. Thus, literature review searches and other target searches can be done using the matrix information. This comprehensive matrix also helps hospitality and tourism faculty, and library personnel make journal subscription decisions with relative ease.
