In My Lookout Cabin

By J. A. Larsen

From my lookout cabin high,
Up above the eagle's nest,
Wave on wave of crests I see;
Glistening peaks and lakes at rest.

Every dawn first meets my gaze,
Ripening brilliant, scarlet, gold;
Throws a lurid purple veil
Over canyons dark and cold.

Wistful morning, pensive, calm;
Quickened by a whispering breeze,
Brings a fragrance and a balm,
Stolen from a million trees.

Gophers, chipmunks, grouse and quail,
Early pay their daily calls;
Coyote, bear or chance blacktail
Eye me wary on their strolls.

Passing swiftly overhead,
Downy clouds of radiant hue,
Made of evanescent thread,
Sail the deep cerulean blue.

From a thunder head at last,
Comes a distant muffled roar,
And a colder sullen blast,
Scurrying the mountain o'er.

Heavy rains the cabin splash,—
Blustering winds the tree tops bend;
Squirrels to their burrows dash,—
Lightning flashes heavens rend.

Roar and rumble, splash and crack;—
Cabin trembles as in pain;—
It's the onslaught of the storm,
In an avalanche of rain.
Sudden comes the sun anew;
While the tempest rumbles on;
Myriad iridescent gems
Clothe each leaf and twig again.

Shadows lengthen—twilight softens
Over mountains, lakes and streams;
Darkness 'round me; stars above me;—
Life and labor melt in dreams.
