

2015

Federal court strikes down Nebraska corporate farming law

Roger McEowen

Neil Harl

Follow this and additional works at: <http://lib.dr.iastate.edu/agdm>

Part of the Agribusiness Commons

Recommended Citation

McEowen, Roger and Harl, Neil (2015) "Federal court strikes down Nebraska corporate farming law," Ag Decision Maker Newsletter: Vol. 10 : Iss. 5 , Article 1.

Available at: <http://lib.dr.iastate.edu/agdm/vol10/iss5/1>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Ag Decision Maker at Iowa State University Digital Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Ag Decision Maker Newsletter by an authorized editor of Iowa State University Digital Repository. For more information, please contact digirep@iastate.edu.

Ag Decision Maker

A Business Newsletter for Agriculture

Vol. 10, No. 5

www.extension.iastate.edu/agdm

March 2006

Federal court strikes down Nebraska corporate farming law*

by Roger McEowen, associate professor of agricultural law, (515) 294-4076, mceowen@iastate.edu and Neil E. Harl, Charles F. Curtiss Distinguished Professor in Agriculture and Emeritus Professor of Economics, Iowa State University, Ames, Iowa. Member of the Iowa Bar, harl@iastate.edu

In late 2005, the Federal District Court for the District of Nebraska held, in Jones, et al. v. Gale, et al., that the Nebraska Constitutional provision restricting unauthorized corporate involvement in certain types of agricultural activities is unconstitutional on “dormant commerce clause” grounds and on the basis that the provision violates the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). The Nebraska Attorney General is appealing the ruling to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, which has ruled twice on anti-corporate farming restrictions in other states in recent years. The case represents the most recent judicial pronouncement concerning the ability of a particular state’s citizenry to shape the future structure of agriculture within that state.

the laws are not designed to slow down or prevent structural change in agriculture, they are designed to control the organizational form of farming operations based on ownership arrangements. Until recently, no appellate-level court at either the state or federal levels had ever held a state anti-corporate farming law unconstitutional.

Handbook updates

For those of you subscribing to the handbook, the following updates are included.

County Loan Rates – A1-34 (2 pages)

Cost of Livestock Production – B1-20 (24 pages)

Please add these files to your handbook and remove the out-of-date material.

continued on page 6

Overview - Anti-Corporate Farming Restrictions.

Presently, nine states prohibit corporations from engaging in agriculture to various degrees. The restrictions grew out of rising concern across the country that several key sectors of the U.S. economy were becoming controlled by a few large firms and multi-state corporations. While Initiative 300.

The Nebraska anti-corporate farming law (I-300) was added to the state Constitution in 1982 by voters through the initiative and referendum process. The law

continued on page 2

Inside . . .

In the agricultural “whodunit,” subsidies may not be the prime suspect..... Page 4

More on handling CSP payments Page 5

IOWA STATE UNIVERSITY
University Extension

Ag Decision Maker is compiled by:
Don Hofstrand, dhof@iastate.edu
Extension Value-added Specialist and Co-director of the Agricultural Marketing Resource Center

Federal court strikes down Nebraska corporate farming law, continued from page 1

prohibits a corporation or syndicate from acquiring or obtaining an interest in any title to real estate used for farming or ranching in Nebraska, or from engaging in farming or ranching in the state. A syndicate is defined as a limited partnership other than a limited partnership in which the partners are members of a family or a trust created for the benefit of a member of the family, related to one another within the fourth degree of kindred (first cousins) or their spouses, at least one of whom is a person residing on or actively engaged in the day-to-day labor and management of the farm or ranch. Numerous exceptions exist, but the major one is for family farm or ranch corporations (defined as a majority of the voting stock held by members of the family) or a trust created for the benefit of a member of the family. The majority shareholders must be related to each other within the fourth degree of kindred (or be the spouse of a family member), and at least one family member must either reside on the farm or be actively engaged in the day-to-day labor and management of the farm.

Jones, et al. v. Gale, et al.

The plaintiffs were engaged in agricultural activities to a certain degree. They all claimed that I-300 barred their proposed activities and challenged the law on the basis that it violated the “dormant commerce clause,” the Privileges and Immunities Clause and the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution. Two of the plaintiffs were disabled and claimed that I-300 also violated the ADA because of the requirement that at least one family member be “a person residing on or actively engaged in the day to day labor and management of the farm or ranch.”

The “Dormant Commerce Clause.”

The Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution forbids discrimination against commerce, which repeatedly has been held to mean that state and localities may not discriminate against the transactions of out-of-state actors in interstate markets even when the Congress has not legislated on the subject. The overriding rationale of the commerce clause was to create and foster the development of a common market among the states and to eradicate internal trade barriers. Thus, a state may not enact rules or regulations requiring out-of-state commerce to be conducted according to the enacting state’s terms. So, states have the power to regulate economic activity within their borders, but cannot do so in a discriminatory manner. If the state has been motivated by a discriminatory purpose, the state bears the burden to show that it is pursuing a legitimate purpose that cannot be achieved with a nondiscriminatory alternative. However, if the state regulates without a discriminatory purpose but with a legitimate purpose, the provision will be upheld unless the burden on interstate commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the benefits that the state derives from the regulation. In essence, a state is free to regulate economic transactions occurring within its borders in the manner it deems appropriate as long as it is done in a nondiscriminatory fashion, but is not free to regulate economic conduct occurring elsewhere.

The court’s “dormant commerce clause” analysis.

The court held that I-300 was facially discriminatory because it “was conceived and born in protectionist fervor,” and that the ballot title and language of I-300 clearly indicated that Nebraskans would be given “favored treatment” on the basis that it would be more economically feasible for those living in close proximity to Nebraska farm and ranches to provide “day-to-day physical labor and management.” As such, the court continued down the path established by the Eighth Circuit in two earlier cases involving anti-corporate farming laws from South Dakota and Iowa, where the court did not examine the actual impact on economic conduct by in-state and out-of-state firms, instead relying on statements of legislators and ballot titles to find discrimination against interstate commerce. But, the court appeared to go even further when it stated, “When it is apparent from the language of a ...state constitutional amendment...that its effect is to burden out-of state economic interests and benefit in-state economic interests, the party challenging it should not be required to bear the burden of an evidentiary hearing to prove the obvious” [emphasis added]. Unfortunately, the court did not provide any explanation as to how the text of I-300, by itself, can have a discriminatory impact on interstate commerce. While the court was correct to examine the text of I-300, the text clearly applies to any corporation or syndicate “organized under the laws of any state of the United States.” The provision does not provide preferential treatment for Nebraska firms as compared to out-of-state firms. All firms wishing to engage in agricultural activities in Nebraska are subject to an identical set of rules, as far as I-300 is concerned. Consequently, an appropriate question is whether I-300 burdens interstate commerce excessively in relation to the benefits that the state derives from I-300. That is not likely to be the case, particularly since I-300 does not contain any prohibition against agricultural contracting activities.

Federal court strikes down Nebraska corporate farming law, continued from page 2

The court also found a discriminatory effect associated with the requirement that a family member provide (as the court referred to it) “day-to-day physical labor and management.” The actual language of I-300 requires that a family member of a qualified entity be a “person residing on or actively engaged in the day-to-day labor and management of the farm or ranch...” The test is one of active engagement and not, as the court put it, the provision of “day-to-day physical labor and management.” While the court relied on Hall v. Progress Pig, Inc., for its reasoning, that case involved the construction of the terms “labor” and “management” and did not directly address the question of the meaning of “active engagement” in the context of the provision of labor and management. There is authority for the notion that “active engagement” requires much less than actually rendering labor and management on the premises. For example, under USDA payment limitation rules, one of the requirements that a farmer (or otherwise eligible entity) must satisfy to be eligible for federal farm program payments is the active engagement test. As part of the active engagement test, the individual (or entity) must make a significant contribution of active personal labor or active personal management (or a combination thereof). While hired services do not count, it is clear that active personal management need not be performed on the farm to satisfy the test – a person can contribute active personal management while living in a distant town. Active engagement in labor activities can be achieved via contract. In any event, under I-300, the mere fact that the shareholder resides on the farm negates the requirement that the shareholder be actively engaged in the day to day labor and management of the farm.

The ADA Claim.

The Court also found that I-300 was invalid under the Constitution’s Supremacy Clause because it conflicted with the ADA on the basis that two of the plaintiffs were disabled and could not perform the daily physical labor that the court believed I-300 required. The ADA provides that “no qualified individual with a disability shall, by reason of such disability, be excluded from participation in or be denied the benefits of the services, programs, or activities of a public entity, or be discriminated by any such entity.” While the court noted that “public entity” has been construed broadly to apply to all actions of state and local governments, the court did not address the point that I-300 did not involve the action of a governmental body. Instead, I-300 was the result of the initiative and referendum process and was approved by Nebraska voters. No action or activity of government was involved. The court also did not address the applicability of the ADA to Nebraska farming operations. The ADA only applies to “employers” that have 15 or more employees for each working day in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year.

Conclusion.

The court’s opinion appears to be seriously flawed in several respects. However, it is questionable whether the opinion will be reversed on appeal. Except for its opinion in Hampton, the Eighth Circuit has not shown much willingness to analyze deeply the dormant commerce clause issue. If the decision stands, it will have a dampening effect on a state’s efforts to ensure competitive markets for agricultural products and a level playing field for independent agricultural producers. Increased pressure could also be placed on the Congress to address the anti-competitive effects of concentrated agricultural markets and vertically integrated agricultural production supply chains.

* Reprinted with permission from the January 6, 2006 issue of Agricultural Law Digest, Agricultural Law Press Publications, Eugene, Oregon. Footnotes not included.