SAY IT WITH A MEMBERSHIP

Mrs. Fred E. Ferguson

Two nurses were discussing a mutual acquaintance, as all of us discuss our co-workers.

"Why, she isn't even a member of the state nurses' association!" exclaimed one. And the other agreed that she wasn't much interested in her profession if she didn't belong to her professional organization.

A public health magazine recently told its readers who had moved to a new locality and were looking for a physician to inquire into the standing in the local medical association of their possible choice.

Lawyers, we are told, are quite devoted to their bar associations. Every branch of "business" has its association. The employees of the street car company in one city have their association. Their association dues have constructed and maintained a huge club building. It is interesting to note that the dues for the street car men's association are deducted from their weekly pay envelope, by permission of the man who earns the money. Isn't that loyalty to the job?

There are more than a thousand women in home economics work in Iowa. Last year less than one-fourth of them were members of their professional organization, the Home Economics Association. We like to think that those who were not members really are proud of their profession, but neglected to say they were proud with a membership in the Home Economics Association.

When asked why they wish to continue their membership in the Home Economics Association, the members say, "Because I believe in my chosen profession. I want to see it advance. I know that the Home Economics Association has much to give me and perhaps I have a bit I can give to others thru the Association."

The help given to the profession by the Home Economics Association is much too lengthy to include here. On this page is a partial report of the committee who worked on the uniform course of study for high schools. Reports of other committees will appear from time to time for the Iowa Homemaker is the official organ of the Iowa Home Economics Association.

Membership in the Home Economics Association is truly a bargain at $2.00 a year, or less than one cent a day. With the membership is the privilege of the half price subscription rate to the Homemaker. For $2.75 home economics workers may show their pride in their chosen profession, aid the good work of the association and receive the Iowa Homemaker.

A new year is just beginning. How many home economics workers are going to rise up and be proud of the profession and SAY IT WITH A MEMBERSHIP?

Sioux City and Burlington high schools are, to date, the only schools in the 100 percent membership class in the Iowa State Home Economics Association. Every teacher in these two schools has paid her membership dues in her association for the coming year.
