How to Entertain Him!

When Holidays Arrive

By Clifford Briggs

WHEN a girl invites her boyfriend home she has probably known him for some time. At this stage of a young girl's romance she either knows what her boy friend likes to do, or else she isn't like most women "who can't be fooled."

"It depends upon the girl" seems to be the concensus of opinion of most fellows asked the question "What would you like to do at a girl's home?" The time of year, the surroundings, her likes and dislikes, all seem to determine how much fun or how little they will have.

One fellow said he would rather dance than do anything else. "Sitting around and talking with the old folks," he said, "got to be an old story."

But on the other hand, one fellow said that he liked to sit around and visit with the parents or go fishing if there were facilities for such. He said, "That's why you go to a girl's home, to get acquainted with the parents."

Going to a show, coming home afterwards and listening to the radio, is also interesting entertainment, he added.

If the girl is athletic at all or likes to swim or play tennis, most of the fellows would like to do the same if it were the time of year for those sports.

One fellow said he had the privilege of being invited to a girl's home where there was a private swimming pool, bridle path, and tennis courts. He had the best time of his life, but it was only that, he explained.

As to how long a fellow should stay depends entirely upon his own judgment, girls. If there's a big family and the family larder isn't so very well stocked, of course, you must not allow him to wear out his welcome. Don't let seeming hospitality get the better of you.

Here the girl again must use her judgment. If she is shrewd enough she can tell whether her parents approve or disapprove of her friend and his stay.

Another thing most fellows like to do for a few days, it is a way that you can show your appreciation for the times he has entertained you at his own expense.

I believe that the sole responsibility remains with the girl when she is her boy friend's hostess. By this time she should know what they like to do in common, and she can provide her entertainment accordingly.
