WINTER'S a good time for figuring out where you want to go. See that you're comfortably situated in an armchair and begin. A little dreaming and planning for future activities will divert your mind and lift your spirits before those wintry blues bog you down. Make June come in January!

If you're considering taking a trip next summer, send for travel pamphlets. You can receive road maps, city maps and suggestions for accommodations and sights you'd want to see. It's surprising how much more you can get from your trip if you start planning early. Half the fun is the anticipation.

Where to go

On a trip you can try to economize, and as a re-suit, maybe the trip will be longer or better. If you like the out-of-doors, you can camp mit, saving hotel and food expenditures. Picnic lunches are extra fun and informal relaxation on a trip. Instead of stopping for snacks, many people take fruit or cookies to nibble on during the day which satisfy them until mealtime. The less the traveling expenses are, the more available at the destination.

Where to stay

If summer school is included on your agenda, write soon for catalogs and general information. Address your letters to the Registrar of the college or university in which you are interested. Inquire about the opportunities of studying in special schools or abroad when visiting your dean or counselor. Also, consult the bulletin board in the library.

Of course, money is needed to travel or go to summer school. You can work now if you have time. Perhaps you have worked during the summer. Saving 50c or $1.00 a week during winter and spring adds up to a significant sum by vacation time.

With all this planning and formulating for your summer, you won't have a minute to get that middle-of-winter gloom. And don't forget to include your friends in your dreams and fancies. They will have helpful ideas and will keep you smiling through the long, cold winter. You can all have June in January.

Go West

forms of the frontier shirts, wrangler jeans and the broad, tooled leather belt. Western store clerks and shoppers often go in this casual costume and save dresses for special occasions.

Most Indian styles reproduced in contemporary fashions originated in the Southwestern tribes mainly the Navahos. These tribes are located near the Mexican border in Arizona, New Mexico and Texas, and are part of the Pueblo Indians.

Arizona, as a typical Western state, has experienced a boom in the fashion industry during the last five years. Many designers retired in the desert, but were so inspired by the surroundings they began creating again and set up new business. A great variety of Western wear is available because there are many of these small firms.

Two opinions are prevalent about this moving market. Western designers feel the frontier fashions are a growing trend; and since the comfortable styles have remained in fashion a long time, they are more than a fad. The Eastern designers are not convinced these casual styles are here to stay.

You can help forge the fashion frontier and enjoy Western comfort and color in your wardrobe. To obtain authentic Indian dress made on the national Indian reservations, write the Department of the Interior to learn where authorized specialty shops are located.
