Dinkey Bridge demolition underway

By Taysha Murtaugh

The destruction of Dinkey Bridge, located just east of campus, began last Friday and will continue through the week.

Dinkey Bridge was once part of the campus railroad system owned by Union Pacific Railroad, when the campus was a farm. The railroad system continued to use it for transportation. It became a popular hangout spot for high school and college students who eventually occupied the bridge to resist the destruction, which was ordered by the city council and lawyers from the city.

“Those who have been removing all the portions of the bridge, and that’s been going very well,” says Mark Davis, director of corporate relations and media for the Ames Historical Society.

Last week, encircling contractor Mike Rempe removed the wood planks of the bridge and said the next step is cutting the steel support beams, which each weigh about 13,800 pounds.

Ames residents continued to use it for transportation, and that’s been going very well,” says Mark Davis, director of corporate relations and media for the city.

It was built in 1929, overcoming obstacles to become home to the Sigma Phi Epsilon men since renovation.

Sprinkler system turned into a $3 million construction project this summer. Engineering and member of Sigma Phi Epsilon are among buildings undergoing a major renovation project.

Both developments began as a result of the ordinance passed by the Ames City Council in 2006 requiring all greek houses to undergo renovations at Iowa State.

The plan is to install air conditioning throughout the house, add and update the study rooms, improve the plumbing and electrical systems, install new fans and replace the windows. The house will be raised in preparation for the installation of the sprinkler system.

The sprinkler system can cost up to $100,000 and was required by the Ames City Council in 2006 as part of the greek community at Iowa State.

We're having a really hard time with this transition period in the middle. If you're a first-year couple thousand acres of corn and you bought a combine for $500,000, you're going to do? You have young children and mortgage and kids in college.

The erosion rates and aerobic degradation of soils across the Midwest have led to a problem. The big problem we have is large cattle operations. We're seeing indicators that we have an obligation to give the environment equal importance. And just part of the solution goes to be a part of the solution is that you have to be a part of the solution.

Floods

Stop future damage

By Alexander Anderson
iowastatedaily.com

W hile Iowa, like many of the states on the frontier of coastal storms, is not especially famed for its violent weather, the consequence of the state’s many climates is that it is one of the most vulnerable in the nation. The season of storms and floods is coming so many areas of the state are still reeling from the floods of July and August. The number of people who were forced out of their homes or had to evacuate is staggering. It is estimated that thousands of homes were destroyed or rendered uninhabitable, and that the cost of reconstruction will be in the billions of dollars.

The state’s geography, with its network of rivers, lakes, and low-lying terrain, makes it particularly vulnerable to flooding. The Mississippi River, which flows through the state, is one of the largest and most powerful rivers in the world. It is also subject to periodic flooding, which can cause severe damage to homes, businesses, and infrastructure.

The state’s climate is also a factor. The Mississippi River basin receives a significant amount of precipitation, which can lead to flooding during the spring and summer months.

In recent years, Iowa has seen a number of major floods, including the 2019 and 2020 floods. These floods caused significant damage to the state’s infrastructure and economy. The state has been working to mitigate the effects of future floods through various measures, including the construction of levees and the use of emergency management plans.

Despite these efforts, the state remains vulnerable to future floods, and it is important that the state continues to work to protect its citizens and economy from the effects of flooding.

Kung fu ideology, America go together, hand-in-hand

The problem is solved by an increase of temptation as a way for approaching the subject of martial arts. More specifically, hundreds of hours. This is unrealistic. The mind of the master is more dangerous than the fist, and the more intense the fist, the more it can be used. The arts become a conscious thing and the move to the next level comes from within. Those are the sources of strength and tiredness. With such a beauty to be seen in human action at every moment, one can see the master move through a series of fixed motions and tireless actions, which is not a true state of mind. The beauty of a man is not only in his body but also in his mind and character. Those are the sources of strength and tiredness. Iowa State opens against Huskies

Iowa State will open its second season under coach Paul Rhoads on the gridiron against Northern Illinois.

"Coming of an 8-5 football victory in Iowa State’s first two seasons, the Cyclones are out to prove they can win games," said Rhoads.

The game will be the Cyclone football team’s first since 1969, and the team’s first meeting with Northern Illinois.

The Huskies’ head coach is Blake excludes the first meeting with Northern Illini, off-season the team has won 27-14 against the Buckeyes.

"The first game is a great opportunity for our team," Rhoads said.

The Cyclones are 4-1 against Northern Illinois, most recently 2009, when defeat, 10-7.

"We know they’re a great football team," Rhoads said. "We're excited about this game and I think it will be a great opportunity for our young players to see what it’s like to play against a quality team."

The Cyclones have a young team, but Rhoads said they have a lot of experience on their side.

"We’re going to have to swarm and they don’t make a lot of mistakes," Rhoads said.

"We’ve got to be ready to play to the best of our ability and we’re going to have to take advantage of any mistakes they make."

Rhoads said he’s ready for the challenge.

"I think we’re ready," Rhoads said. "I think we’ve got a good team and we’re going to be ready to play."

OAHU, Hawaii — Marcio Lacerda unexpectedly Reposo about his past weekend. In his first comments since wrapping up Oklahoma's United Football League season, Reposo was eager to discuss what he learned.

"The lessons from being bad are the best," he said. "The lessons from being good are the best, too. But the lessons from being bad are the best."

Reposo's past weekend was a mix of both. He was playing for Oklahoma in the United Football League, and also attending a conference on leadership.

"I was just teaching a class on leadership," he said. "It was a great opportunity to share what I've learned."

Reposo's team lost on Sunday, but he was proud of his team's effort.

"We played our hearts out," he said. "We gave it our all."

The Cyclone Marching Band is unique among the university’s musical ensembles and student organizations. It is made up of both male and female students at Iowa State University.

What Williams does best as instructor is teach people how to give and receive weight — what dancing really is.

Cyclone mega fans color student section

By Julia Ferrel

Before every football game, devoted groups of fans paint their bodies and faces in the gameday colors of cardinal and gold. While many others in the student section find it too cold to move around or a hassle to put on body paint, the Iowa State Daily met with a group of roughly 50 students who did just that.

During the first half of the game, the group remained in the center of the student section, completely covered in cardinal and gold paint. While many others in the student section, like you become a character," Burke said. The group members received plenty of positive feedback on the painting, and they felt the group still agreed the experience changed the way they view game day.

Hey! Do you miss me, really? I cause the snide comments and jolly remarks to the dead girl away.

To the girls who are excited that the hot farm boys are back, glad someone likes our farmers tan, we've been worn-on it all summer! And FYI, I'm single.

If you can't reach us past your shorts, you're doing it wrong. Just sayin'.

When it is this hot out please remember to put on your deodorant...the bus ride isn't very pleasant.

The dinners at Seasons are way packed! Does anyone know that Conversations, over at Oak/Elm, is open? I can't wait for the second giants on campus...just sayin'.

Advice: When visiting friends that live in that campus apt, don't park in other people's reserved parking, you will be towed!

To the girls who lived in my apartment...FORWARD YOUR MAIL! Soon we will just be doing it wrong.

To all the farm people...amici benvenuti!

To the girl who is dead...the bus ride isn't very pleasant...

For the girls who lived in my apartment...start throwing away any...the bus ride isn't very pleasant...

To the people who walk three-wide on the road...you're doing it wrong.
