BEATING THE CIS-TEM

A look at privilege

By Mya Krieg-Coen

Most students have never stopped to think about what constitutes a cis-tem. Most students have never thought about why they identify as who they are. And most have never stepped to think about it because most have never had to. It’s not until years later that they are forced to make a choice as a cis-tem. A cis-tem person must examine aspects of their identity alone with their biological sex. One who is not biologically female is cis-tem.

CIS-LIST

A list of privileges inacted by identifying with your biological sex.

1. Use of public restrooms without fear of intruding on your biological sex.
2. Right to use public facilities such as gym locker rooms and dorm showering rooms without fear of invasion, fear or anxiety.
3. Access to gender exclusive spaces such as the Women’s College through Memorial Union.
4. Not being asked to provide proof, such as birth certificate, drivers license or passport, to ensure gender

5. Exclusion from gender identity information requests, such as the Michigan Womyn’s Music Festival or Take Back the Night and not being asked to prove one’s gender.
6. The reasonable assumption that you can live or work in an apartment or secure a loan will not be denied on the basis on one’s gender identity.
7. The reasonable assumption that you can use public restrooms without fear of being excluded due to your trans status.
8. Being able to purchase shoes that fit your gender expression without having to order them in special sizes or asking someone to custom-make them.
9. The ability to reasonably assume that you are not a legal outlier, and provided welcoming and compassionate treatment because the staff does not believe the gender marker on a given ID card is wrong.
10. Not having to deal with old photos that do not reflect who one is now.

These are the privileges associated with being a cis-tem person, or a cis-tem person, simply because they are either a cis-tem person. Most cis-tem students have never been questioned about why they identify as who they do. Most students have never hesitated about checking the box next to a gender. Most have never had to do this before. It’s not until years later that they are forced to make a choice as a cis-tem.

One student gets chance of a lifetime

By David Bartholomew

It’s hard to imagine as a college student having the opportunity to address the president of the United States. It’s even harder to imagine introducing the president of the United States while still in college. But to Mischa Olson, senior in biology, that is exactly what happened.

For the last 15 years, Dance Marathon has been giving both financial and emotional support to families in children with rare life-threatening illnesses.

The participants in Dance Marathon perform one last morale dance for the 2012 event Jan. 21 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Union.
Harry, who is patron of the charity United Kingdom.

It was nearly two weeks ago when he spoke at a charity event in Las Vegas and said they were taken while he laughed with him.

"But never one to be shy in the name of journalism, I'll give it a go, "he said. "But never one to be shy in the name of journalism, I'll give it a go, "

"and said they were taken while he laughed with him."
Privilege is a familiar word, meaning entitlement. However, when paired with "cis," it becomes a novelty. What does it mean to have cis privilege?

Cis privilege is not limited to what is central but also what is never even considered. It can be a level of ignorance toward those who are without the same set of rights that are based on nothing more than the fact that one’s gender matches what the societal norm expects.

For those who do not fall into the two gender categories, it is often more difficult to navigate the tides of society, as the societal guidelines for sex and gender are the same.

“People generally don’t know a lot about those communities,” said Charlie Pfeiffer, senior in graphic design who identifies as queer. “I was assigned female at birth but identified as male.”

“I’ve been asked the most ridiculous questions,” he said, laughing as he begins the day. “The two questions I can almost always count on are being asked about which bathroom I use and what my genital look like. Imagine being asked that.”

Correct terminology, gender-neutral bathrooms and a general understanding are just a few privileges that can easily fall to the wayside.

Privilege is not having to worry about gender or people using correct pronouns when referring to you. It is never being questioned, asked or the slightest hint of identifying with your gender.

“Think of anytime you see a person,” said Freihoefer. “You automatically assume the person is a gender or a gender and heterosexual. It doesn’t even occur to most people that they could be something other than that.”

Freihoefer considers the first step in eliminating this inequality is also the most immediate: education.

“We can take action in simply recognizing that cis privilege is there,” Freihoefer said. “We might have treated people with disabilities as objects, a tripwire or a modification. Being aware of it is half the battle.”
The Obama McNair Program set to end in September

By Mischa Olson

The McNair program, which aimed to increase research and scholarly activity within the university, has come to an end. The McNair program coordinator, Robert McNair, said that he wants to acknowledge all the students who have been successful in the program, but he also wants to end it to focus on other initiatives for the university.

“The McNair program has been a great opportunity for students to engage in research and explore their interests,” McNair said. “But as we look to the future, we need to focus on other initiatives that will benefit our students.”

The McNair program was created in 2003 and is funded by the National Science Foundation. Its purpose is to increase the number of minority students who enter and complete graduate programs in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics.

McNair said that the program has helped many students achieve their goals, but it is time for the university to move on. “We need to focus on other initiatives that will benefit our students in the long run,” McNair said. “We need to focus on initiatives that will benefit our students in the long run.”

The McNair program is set to end in September, and McNair said that the university will look to other initiatives to continue its mission.

“I think it is important for our students to continue to be involved in research and to continue to explore their interests,” McNair said. “We need to continue to support our students in their academic pursuits.”

More than 60,000 coffee-making machines are sold in the United States and Canada due to an apparent defect in the machine that releases a gusher of steaming water when the coffee pot is removed, according to reports including Food and Standards, as well as independent recall reports.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission said in a statement that a review of reports indicates that consumers have experienced serious burns ranging from second-degree burns to a complete burn injury. Coffee companies have been paying even more attention to safety in recent years.

Get a taste of British tradition

Ames British Foods is a local retail store that specializes in imported British food and gifts. They offer Internet and mail-order services as well as a physical store in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The business grew quite quickly, and in the first year of operation, they had more than 2,000 orders coming in.

The best part of running this type of store is the opportunity to sell British goods to people who are passionate about British culture. The owners have traveled extensively throughout the United Kingdom and have been able to source a wide variety of British goods.

Conventions no longer carry weight

Today marks the opening day of the Democratic National Convention and, after last week’s Republican National Convention we have to ask: With the significant role of the surfacing and showmanship party conventions now hold, are American voters more or less informed? One Gallup poll shows close to neutral effects of the Convention. Among undecided voters nationwide, the number of potential voters who could not decide whether they were more or less likely to vote for Mitt Romney or Barack Obama was unaffected by the Convention.

The poll’s results show that it is the moderate or unaffiliated section of American voters that are in the “Kingpin” position. In the aftermath of the Convention 83 percent of Republicans were more or less likely to vote for Romney and 74 percent of Democrats were less or more likely to vote for him. The split among undecided voters nationwide was 36 percent more were likely to vote for Romney, 33 percent were less likely to vote for him and many—30 percent—were undecided or not impressed. Those numbers might be different if single, isolated facts were not taken out of their stories to advance party purposes. That practice demonstrated alone by the existence of a whole industry that now sur- rounds fact-checking of claims from nationally known outlets such as the Washington Post and Slate to local sources in Iowa City. From this dawn to shining sea, has weighed in on the Convention speeches.

In fact, the facts are the story of a story. What we need and really want is a picture of the American political scene that will be different. That hope is not an easy task. American voters would be better served by parties that allow the slightest individualism. Instead of synthesizing the region- al and local preferences of a national party into a whole, the central theme of a national Convention repeated mind- sets, the 2012 Republican National Convention was a showcase— the image of a whole organization that is a personal presence or star to the average adult wrote with a pen 41 days ago.

Voting

Johnson could change the game

Libertarian candidate Gov. Gary Johnson will be an option for voters in Iowa this November, and he could make a difference. While he is a foreign policy hawks and his views on drug policy are not for everyone, his economic ideas are appealing to many Americans. He has a plan to reduce the deficit and balance the budget by cutting government spending without sacrificing social programs. Johnson is currently seen as a potential competitive challenger to the major party candidates.

Penmanship

Physically writing notes helps students retain info

People number the last time you wrote? Do you use a pen or a pencil? Is out of your latest assignment, you took notes across your laptop in class, you took notes by typing and if helps, you tested your friend, and suddenly you tossed off a letter or two with as little credit card payment. Maybe you can that is, by making a conscious effort, the average adult wrote with a pen at least once per day. People now may not have knowledge of their handwriting or how their handwriting can be understood by others. Writing has been a milestone in human history, which helped to a degree to secure his experience over a period of time. The human civilization has written by hand for the majority of its existence. Initials, even, were handwriting for the framers. Who could read and understand the intentions of the ones who processed previously the production of written material. The invention of typewriters and later computer mechanized the selection of personal writing. But today’s tests the handwrit- ing and paper to the extent that is used. Filling out forms can turn into a chore for writing.

There is no doubt that typing is faster than handwriting. The speed with which a typewriter or a computer can write is staggering. However, it is important to consider the long-term benefits of handwriting. Handwritten notes are easier to scan and find later, whereas typed notes can be lost or misplaced. Additionally, typing can lead to writer’s block, whereas handwritten notes can help authors get their thoughts down on paper.

Letter to the editor

King offends farmers

Five generations of my family have been actively farming and involved with livestock all our lives. As long as I can remember, farmers have been used to fighting legal battles to keep animals on their farms. Farmers have always had to keep it legal or they would lose their farms.

In 2008, President Barack Obama used similar legal maneuvers to get his way. He also used his fame to collect signatures for inclusion on the Iowa ballot. The signatures needed to include Johnson on the ballots were gathered at the Iowa State Fair. Kramer’s claim states that those signatures were not all from Iowa, and Clinton won 55 percent of the vote in Michigan, where Obama was not even listed on the ballot.

Likely stemming from this threat, Jay Kramer, a Romney campaign supporter from Washington, filed a challenge Friday to prevent Johnson from inclusion on the Iowa ballot. The signatures necessary to include Johnson were gathered on the Iowa State Fair; Kramer’s claim states those signatures were not all from Libertarians and should be thrown out.

On Monday, Matt Schultz, campaign attorney, claims Johnson has to offer. Maybe you like it, maybe you don’t, but don’t ignore him simply because he doesn’t have access to the millions and millions of dollars being pumped around by the Republican and Democratic parties and super PACs.

In a real campaign, with a legitimate following and resources to be heard in the debate and on the ballot, there are enough people supporting Johnson to change the electoral vote for a state. Perhaps politicians should be cut some slack to allow more options in the electoral votes. Republicans don’t have to vote for a candidate they don’t like. Traditionally, Republicans aren’t the only party to employ tactics to get rid of potential candidates. President Barak Obama used electronic votes to rid himself of competition when he first campaigned during 2008 for a seat in Illinois. In 2008, Obama sought to prevent the seating of a trivia and Michigan delegates at the Democratic National Convention because their primary was held early. In Florida, 50 percent of the vote went to Hillary Clinton. Obama brought competition to the time, compared to his 69 percent, and Clinton won 43 percent of the vote in Michigan, where Obama was not even listed on the ballot.

Tactically, those legal maneuvers have been so much paperwork involved in becoming a nominee for office. When politicians run, they want to win, and if they are not considerate of their voters, they could be considered dead in the water. Johnson’s campaign tactics, client services and keeping them in Iowa are the reasons why the Republican Party is trying to keep Johnson off the ballot in Michigan and Pennsylvania, with more attempts to prevent him from inclusion on the ballots.

With any luck, Johnson will be included on the ballot for all 50 states.

Big decisions made just before first game

After arguably Steve-Striker’s best game on the field, a third-string player on the sideline could have been excused. He had thrown for 263 yards and one touchdown in the first half of the first game. He had completed 12 of 16 passes.

After all, he threw for a career-high 194 yards with 60 percent completion in the first half of the first game. He had completed 12 of 16 passes.

The number of total games the Cyclones return this year is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. It’s irritating; it’s the ISU football program has had this exact same situation for 80 years.

If you attended an Iowa State Cyclones football game on Saturday, you flipped the channel to ESPN to watch the back-up quarterback who currently holds the record for victories in Iowa State history. Jantz was 3-4 as a starter before getting benched last season.

An almost constant component of the 2012 defense in its past has been consistent pressure on the opposing quarterback.

In this week's news conference on Monday, Sept. 3, 2012, coach Paul Rhoads said his defense line has more depth than it did when he came to Ames four years ago, allowing the unit to apply that pressure against the quarterbacks.

"There’s a big difference in the guys we were putting out and the production we’re getting out of them," Rhoads said.

In the Cyclone’s 28-23 come-from-behind victory over Tulsa, the defense line kept Tulsa quarterback Cody Green uncomfortable by sacking 12 plays, allowing Rhoads to use plenty of depth. Rhoads even moved the end of the end of the line when Tony Nelson entered the game as the No. 2 defense end.

"Rotating at d-line, that gives us a better chance of having a higher success rate," Rhoads said. "Last year I got my first sack, that year I was bigger because I’m better as a pass rusher. I figured getting that sack was probably the right way to do it."

Along with Nelson, red- dshirt freshman Nick North and senior line- man Alex Driskell have added depth to the Cyclone defense.

"These are guys who are going to do their job. It makes a huge difference," senior linebacker Jake Knott said.

"These guys are getting used to the crowd, used to playing against a different team," said senior linebacker Jett Sternberg. "Getting out there, just getting used to the crowd, used to playing against a different team, it was just good to play against somebody else," Arceo said after the game.

Even though Rhoads never formally announced who the starting kicker would be until game time, he had about true freshman Steele Jantz still having a surprise allowed someone to believe he was going to start.

"I used the decision had been made ear- lier in the week," Rhoads said. "I went out there, there was a new first in front of me," said senior line- backer Jake Knott about the defensive line. "When you can do that, you have complete faith in the guys that they’re going to do their job. It makes a huge difference."

Arceo settled in as kicker.

One of the main questions going into last Saturday’s game - the possibility of a new starting kicker was whether Knott would fill in.

"With my father being a high school and college football coach, these batches seem to return whenever you turn on Saturday," Rhoads said. "That was the case, I went to turn on some Iowa and Iowa State games."
