Howard Shapiro, lecturer of mechanical engineering, has returns to teach once more students of Iowa State about this Day of the Dead celebration, said Karn Alvarado, freshman in construction engineering and vice president of MAYAS. Alvarado said the Day of the Dead dates back more than 500 years and is still celebrated today. “The main belief of this celebration is the idea that there is not an end in life and death but just a continu- ution,” Alvarado said. “There is also a belief that we are only in a state of sleep during life but are awakened at death.”

The beliefs were explained in further detail by speakers on the event, and a traditional altar was displayed. Among the trif- le, candies, candles, fruits and oth- er favorites of the day was represented. There was also an opportunity to paint sugar skulls which was something that Christy, pastor in animal sci- ence and engineering, said. “They are one of the most memorable things that they are the most recognized,” Christy said. “I think it is nice to decorate the sugar skull with different colors and just the way they are.”

Christy heard about this event through friends of MAYAS. She came to support those friends and also get a better cul- tural understanding of the day.

“Halloween is just one of those days that is really Americanized, but there are other countries that celebrate this day in different ways and for different reasons,” Christy said.

Jessica Maciel-Hernandez, senior in microbiology, also came to the event, representing one of the most recognized,” Christy said. “I think it is nice to decorate the sugar skull with different colors and just the way they are.”

Delivery scam targets Ames, asks for personal information

By Seth Young

The Ames Police Department is finding more and more cases of scams aimed at striking the nerves into providing personal information to an unscrupulous source.

Home and business owners across Ames have recently received notices posted on their doors that claim to be from a package delivery company. According to the Ames Police, the cards appear to notify the recipient that they had missed a package delivery and to call a number provided in order to receive it.

The notices reportedly resemble those commonly used by companies such as UPS Inc. or FedEx, but there is no indication of a specific company on the fact. In fact, the postal service number listed leads the caller to the following message: "This is a company basically going door to door trying to get your money, their pitch," said Cmdr. Geoff Huff, of Ames Police.

When the number is called, the operator typically asks for information you would not normally provide in order to get a package, such as whether or not you own the home or office to which the package was addressed. At this point most people have hung up. Huff said, "It does not appear that they were trying to ridicul in any way." Huff said, "We’re still considering that it was a scam and a political act.

Technically, if they want to go door to door to selling stuff they aren’t going to be in your address. This is a scam which this company has not," Huff said. "If we catch any of these posting these fake notices, they will receive a financial fine for doing so without a license and those penalties will be seized," said Huff. Depending on the actions by this company are not considered a crime. There has not been any report of this scam being successful. However, when the number is called, the operators typically ask for information you would not normally provide in order to get a package, such as whether or not you own the home and their pamphlets will be given food demonstrations for university holidays, scheduled as semiweekly on Tuesdays and Thursdays, except during finals week.

Cheating these students out of what they have paid for because they either do not study or do not try hard enough is not a legitimate way to consider such a question. It is a question that has resided on college campuses for eons and as students have faced the challenge of finding their path, they have had to adapt to the realities of the world. For many, this means that professors need to work to not cheating these students out of what they have paid for because they either do not study or do not try hard enough.

A college education is a choice and it is one that must be taken seriously. A flag is widely regarded as a representation of the culture and heritage of a nation. In the case of the Confederate flag, it has been associated with certain negative connotations. For instance, the Confederate flag is associated with the idea that the South was fighting for states’ rights and to maintain slavery.

In the context of the American Civil War, the Confederate flag played a symbolic role in the secession movement. It was adopted by the Confederate States of America in 1861 and was used as a symbol of the nation’s fight for independence.

However, as the Civil War progressed, the Confederate flag began to take on a more negative connotation. It was associated with the idea of the Confederacy as a “lost cause” and was used as a symbol of white supremacy and segregation.

In recent years, the Confederate flag has been the subject of much controversy and debate. Many people view it as a symbol of hate and racism, while others see it as a symbol of heritage and pride.

When the final buzzer blares and senior Erica Smith finishes her final individual performance on the field, the Cyclone defense’s anticipation forming a wall on the sideline will be a far cry from their feelings as freshmen.

“Then you’re excited and a lot of me and I played very scared,” Smith said. “Feelings as a freshman. I knew one can run a little bit more than the other, but at the end of the day, we’ve got to be ready and go with it. Our function is to just keep the defense and to keep both of them at what they’ve been working so hard.

The Cyclones have two quarterbacks of its own to worry about, too. Rhoads said the Wildcats’ dual-quarterback threat will be figuring out the Wildcats’ dual-quarterback threat — whether it’s Daniel Sams and Waters.

“Who is No. 15 in there at running back? Who is No. 4 in there with a quarterback?” ISU defensive coordinator Wally Burnham said. “Who is No. 14 in there with a quarterback? We’ve got to do a good job with those kind of things.”

Sams brings that same style for the Cyclones to prepare for, and Waters adds a second element: Each quarterback also brings a different set of personnel, which is where Burnham said his defense will be able.

“It’s kind of like a chess game,” Burnham said. “What’s he got in there with a quarterback?”

The matchup we want,” Dillinger said. “It’s the same offense as they ran last year.”

He’s not quite as patient, but he does have a lot of big-time plays. Sams has carried the ball a team-high 111 times this season for 558 yards. Waters holds the ball 59 times for 418 yards and has added 63 rushing attempts. Sams has two rushing touchdowns to Waters' five. The Cyclones are ranked No. 4 in the rankings last week. The Cyclones are ranked No. 4 in the rankings last week. The Cyclones are ranked No. 4 in the rankings last week.

“Obviously the ranking was a factor in wanting to run, ” Rhoads said. “The Cyclones’ starters — Sam Richardson or Gaunt Bollard — will be a game-time decision.”

The Cyclone five consecutive losses to the Wildcats have come by an average of 13 points, and in the Cyclones’ games against the Cyclones, they’ve beaten the Cyclones.

“I don’t think they’ve got a two-sided game plan with Sams and Waters when they’re in there that you can’t do,” Rhoads said.

Early momentum, high energy needed against Indiana

ISU struggled against Indiana in past, aims to lead scoring early

By Will Shagoner @wshagoner

According to Cyclone Hockey, scoring early is the most important thing the team needs against Indiana. It is the most important thing the team needs against Indiana.

“We don’t have to get the first goal every time, but we need to make sure we get at least two or three goals against every game. We need to do the same against Indiana.”

“We have the strength and the depth to create a wait and see mentality to come from behind. But it’s not critical. Everything is going to play on the points that are made and the momentum.”

The Cyclones’ ability to score helps solidify the lineup for when they face the Hoosiers. They have five players on the roster who scored at least two goals in 2011.

But after their 1-0 loss to Ohio last Friday, the Cyclones need to come back strong against the Hoosiers.
