Community gathers to honor victims in Nepal

About 100 people from the ISU and Ames community gathered Thursday on Central Campus to remember the almost 6,000 who died in the 7.8 magnitude earthquake in Nepal with a candle light vigil.

The earthquake occurred Saturday, April 25, but aftershocks continue to shake the country. The Nepal Student Association hosted the event. About 19 people in attendance were from Nepal.

Iowa Senate approves money for tuition freeze

Iowa’s three regent universities will have a tuition freeze for the third consecutive year after the Iowa Senate approved an appropriations package on Wednesday.

Senate file 493’s funding approval is in odds with the proposed House Appropriations Committee bill cutting funding for the Board of Regents, Department of Revenue and the Department of Education and the Department of Education’s appropriations package also provides funding for the Board of Regents to adopt a performance-based funding model for the regents universities.

The Senator’s higher education appropriations bill also includes 6 billion for the upcoming state fiscal year for the Board of Regents, Department for the Blind, Department of Revenue and the Department of Education and the Department of Education.

The plan represents a $49 million increase over the current fiscal year and is $48 million more than the house proposed package also provides.

In a statement released Wednesday, Senate Majority Leader Bruce Brazer praised the Senate for understanding the unique budget circumstances facing the Northern Iowa and Iowa State.

“The Board appreciates the Senate’s willingness to provide a 1.75% inflationary increase to the university’s operating budget, which guarantees a third consecutive tuition freeze,” Brazer said.

Teaching farms celebrate five decades of rich history

By Allison Lusty
@iowastatedaily.com

Nearly five decades ago, sheep grazed on Central Campus and pigs dodged traffic on the Kildee parking lot. Swine farmers on pasture and beef cattle raised Frederiksen Court. Each facility had an arena to roam Frederiksen Court.

Today, the teaching farms are located south of campus and incorporate modern technology. The farms’ purpose remains true to the original intent, however modern students have additional opportunities.

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the Iowa State teaching farms.

“The teaching farms are a face of the Animal Science Department. They provide meager compensation to students who work there,” said Virgil Drescher, swine farms manager.

“Central Campus and pigs are gone, but the teaching farms are still here providing students with the opportunity to learn.”

The Iowa State Teaching Farms, like many, are a result of the Morrill Act passed in 1862. It was created to foster future agricultural giants in the Midwest. Today, the teaching farms are a part of the College of Agriculture and LSA.

“Iowa State has a rich agricultural background as it is the first land-grant institution in 1864,” said Meghan Ludwig, senior in kinesiology and health.

“Eikkekakis tells us to dig deep and to investigate the literature to make sure that we are catching on to the best research.

This semester, Eikkekakis invited the students into an independent study course. The course is designed to allow students to review different journal articles each week and to teach them to apply the quality of research. Jaimie Freiburger, senior in kinesiology and health, believes Eikkekakis is the professor he needs to get a credit, but Ben Dekker does the same amount of work for the credit. Freiburger has done both in both the club and in class.

Eikkekakis teaches students to never trust research without doing proper investigation. He teaches them that doing research is very hard and extremely time consuming. It is important to analyze literature with an unbiased, critical approach.

Freiburger said Eikkekakis’ teachings help students in other classes. She said a lot of teachers expect students to be capable of looking at literature with this critical approach, and with Eikkekakis’ help, they actually do.

Eikkekakis’ work will not only help with undergraduate work, but it will help in graduate and professional school as well. Once these students enter graduate and professional school, they believe the help Eikkekakis has done will give them an edge over their peers.

“I would say 95 percent of what these students will be going to physical therapy school with won’t know how to do what he’s taught us,” said Colton McGonigle, junior in kinesiology and health.

The skills Eikkekakis teaches students are graduate-level work. Students are expected to score graduate level on the National Board of Physical Therapy Exam.

The Journal Club with the help of Zack Zenko, graduate student in kinesiology and health, created the Journal Club.

“The coolest thing was preparing students to look at the research and for giving them the extra opportunity to learn,” Freiburger said.

The skills Eikkekakis has taught are helping students gain eyes to the faults in research and for giving them the extra opportunity to learn.

“The journal club is a form of critical appraisal and the Journal Club prepares students to excel in future academic and professional endeavors. “It is so approachable,” Freiburger said.

“Eikkekakis, probably the most approachable professor I’ve ever had.”

Eikkekakis’ efforts go beyond simply educating students to want to learn. Each semester, he encourages his students to take on a project and to present at a conference.

“I never gave up on them. This semester, he was always there and if you were unsure about something, he was always so friendly and great about clearing it up,” Freiburger said.

Eikkekakis also cares about his students.

“I’d like to thank the Professor for the unconditional support he has given all of us,” Freiburger said. “I feel like the amount of support he has given us throughout my undergraduate career. He’s one of the best people to have behind you for support,”

“Eikkekakis’ biggest strength is his communication skills,” Freiburger said. “He will give them an edge over their peers.”

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

With same-sex marriage, columnist Snyder believes there has been enough talk about the issue and there is only one way for society to move forward.

It's been a long fight, but it's almost over. The Supreme Court decision is expected at any time, and a 5-4 decision in favor of same-sex marriage is almost a certainty. With that decision, the nation will finally move past the divisive issue of same-sex marriage and move towards a more united future.

Snyder points out that despite the long and arduous journey, the ultimate goal of equal rights for all individuals has been achieved. He notes that the Supreme Court decision is not only a victory for same-sex couples, but also for the entire nation, as it represents a step towards a more inclusive and just society.

The column also highlights the importance of patience and perseverance, as it was only through the efforts of countless people over many years that same-sex marriage became a reality. It serves as a reminder that even the most challenging battles can be won through dedication and hard work.

Overall, Snyder's column is a powerful reminder of the progress that has been made and the importance of continuing to fight for justice and equality in the future. It is a call to action for all who believe in the power of love and the dignity of all individuals.

Abby Caldwell's positive attitude results in impressive performances

By Kyle Heim
@IOWADAILY

Abby Caldwell’s title is one bread and butter, but that hasn’t stopped the 19-year-old from looking to improve her time and build up her competition. Caldwell said, “I think it’s healthy to be competitive, and I think you’re always pushing yourself to get better.”

The senior from Winter Park, Florida, has been introduced to the door track season, and hasn’t been daunted by the least bit intimidated. Caldwell has been one of the toughest competitors in the country, and hasn’t been afraid of meeting the strongest competition.

EARLY SUCCESS

“Looking at the times we have so far, I think we are all excited for what we can do,” said distance runner Matt Bevil, who will compete in the 3,000-meter steeplechase this outdoor season in the Big 12 Outdoor Championships.

One more meet, two more weeks — then it’s time for the Big 12 Outdoor Championships. The 195m track and field team will split in two, and send runners to Palo Alto, Calif., and Iowa City for more tune ups before the highest level meets.

Senior Abby Caldwell will be more excited the closer we get to Big 12s. “The Big 12 Outdoor Championship is the meet of all the athletes have been working for throughout this outdoor season. It’s just one more stretch — one final push to the finish.”

Men’s track, field compete in final meet before Big 12s

Men’s track and field team will split in two, and send runners to Palo Alto, Calif., and Iowa City for more tune ups before the highest level meets. The two distance runners will provide extra respite to the islanders, this weekend will provide extra rope to the upcoming week.

“I think that everyone is confident and where you do well is good to see how you do,” said distance runner Matt Bevil, who will compete in the 3,000-meter steeplechase this outdoor season in the Big 12 Outdoor Championships.

Looking at the times we have so far, I think we are all excited for what we can do,” said distance runner Matt Bevil, who will go to Iowa City this weekend. “We are building off week to week and I think we are closer we get to Big 12s.”

The Payton Jordan Invitational will take place Friday and Saturday at Stanford. Other runners on the team will compete in the Munsey Track Invitational on Saturday.

Loan Repayment

Basic borrowing tips:
- Borrow only what you need
- Borrow as a last resort

How to get a loan:
- Complete a FAFSA to qualify for federal student loans first
- Do research if you need a private student loan
  - Calculate how much you need to borrow
  - Get your credit score (above 640 is best)
  - Determine if you need or have someone to co-sign with you
  - What are the lenders’ terms, interest, repayment options?
- Apply for the loan
  - Complete and provide all of the lender’s required documentation
  - If borrowing for the first time, set up loan counseling with the Student Loan Education Office

More tips:
- You don’t have to borrow the maximum amount. Contact the Office of Financial Aid to request a lower amount, 515-294-2223
- Loan repayment begins 6 months after a student drops below half-time enrollment

Consolidating loans:
- Allows you to combine several education loans into one
- Have a single monthly payment instead of multiple payments
- Available once you start paying student loans
- Consider your options
  - Compare current interest rates and amount of time to repay loans before consolidating
- Can apply at studentloans.gov

How to pay back a loan (studentaid.ed.gov):
- Make payments to loan servicer, and be sure to pay loans on time even if you don’t receive a bill
- Choosing a repayment plan:
  - There are lots of options out there. Choose a plan that best fits your needs!
  - Keep in mind, a smaller monthly payment may be larger overall costs
- Deferment and Forebearance
  - Way to temporarily decrease repayment amount due to financial hardship
  - Contact your loan servicer for options and qualifications
  - Contact the Student Financial Aid Office for more information

Forgiveness, Cancellation & Discharge (studentaid.ed.gov):
- Rare circumstances where you don’t have to pay off a loan
- Includes certain kinds of teaching service, total and permanent disability, and closure of school where you studied
- Contact loan servicer if you think you apply
- Only stop paying if you are 100% sure your forgiveness is approved

Problems students run into when having a loan (Student Loan Ed Office):
- How much to borrow
- Accumulating too much debt (not monitoring amount borrowed)
- Parents set it up, students hold no active role

Any disputes?
- Talk to your loan servicer!
- They are required by law to work with you

What is default?
- It is not good to be in default.
- This means you failed to make payments on your student loan according to terms on the promissory note
- Loan becomes delinquent the first day you miss a payment
- After 90 days, loan services report delinquencies to three major credit bureaus and decreases your credit
- If you are in default: contact your loan servicer and ask what you can do to get out of default
- Contact your loan servicer or the Student Financial Aid Office if you think a mistake has been made
