NORML seeks legal advice in shirt denial

Iowa’s three regent universities are under review in hopes of finding ways to become more efficient. Iowa State held its public forum on the Iowa Board of Regents' Transparency, Inclusiveness and Efficiency Review Tuesday evening. The efficiency review, sometimes referred to as TIER, is a review that will look at the processes, programs and spending of all three regent universities — Iowa State University of Iowa and University of Northern Iowa. The regents have hired Deloitte Consulting to conduct the review. “We owe it to our students, to their parents, to taxpayers of Iowa to be as efficient as possible,” said Bruce Rastetter, president of the Board of Regents. “This is still largely undefined by the medical community.” The current legal status of marijuana is being reviewed by the medical community.

Hughes vetses clinic funds, suggests new student service

By Kelsey Batschelet

The Government of the Student Body, or GSB, vetoed the financial counseling clinic for the 2015 fiscal year. Hughes said that this decision was made based on the new clinics being created on campus. Hughes also suggested that a new financial counseling clinic be created. The clinic would be created at the university, and the student senators would be able to provide a “unique, at-large service to the community.”

By Danielle Ferguson

In November 2012, after complaints were raised by several student senators in attendance, the Board of Regents approved the ISU student organization’s request to establish a financial counseling clinic. The clinic would continue to exist as a student organization, but the regents would provide funds to run the clinic.

Iowa State’s NORML is working to change a trademark licensing policy that prohibited them from using Iowa State logos on their organization’s shirts. Iowa State’s chapter of the National Organization for Reforming Marijuana Laws has contacted a freedom of speech watchdog organization to help them change the policy. The university’s trademark licensing office recently changed trademark licensing procedures.

Iowa State University of Iowa’s chapter of the National Organization for Reforming Marijuana Laws is still largely undefined by the medical community. The current legal status of marijuana is being reviewed by the medical community.

Hughes calculated that at its current rate, the university would need to provide services to students only, and the current financial counseling fund would not be able to provide a “unique, at-large service to the community.”

Counseling Clinic for the 2015 fiscal year. The financial aid office has offered to pay the cost of what is needed to open and run the new clinic. The current financial counseling fund would continue to exist as a part of the human development family study department funded by the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Hughes believes that the two clinics could coexist on campus. He said that the new clinic established with the GSB would provide services to students only, and the current financial counseling fund would be able to provide a “unique, at-large service to the community.”

As a result of Hughes’ presentation several student senators in attendance requested the details on how the new clinic would be funded and compared this year’s numbers to previous years. As a result of Hughes’ presentation, the chair of the finance committee asked questions. The concerns about the financial counseling clinic are that it is not a professional service, but rather something that is provided by the state to students. Hughes made it clear that he is not opposed to the idea of counseling involved, but rather with the idea that the funds that GSB provides are to support student services and the Alix. The new clinic would use the $515 per student enrollment plan, would be paid-off by May 2023 after 10 payments.

The last time an efficiency study like this was done was about 10 years ago, Rastetter said.

Deloitte will use the reviews with different groups on campus, including faculty, staff, students, faculty members, counseling, marketing and students. They are scheduled to be on campus the week of April 14, though a schedule is not yet finalized.

Based on the First Two trials, Deloitte will make recommendations to the Board of Regents.

Climate change affects salamander size

Professor studies environmental impact on growth of amphibians

By Kelly Schlotter
kschlotter@iowastate.edu

An ISU professor is looking into the effects of climate change on the size of salamanders. The influence of climate change on the growth of amphibia is particularly concerning because salamanders rely on environmental conditions.

Dean Adams, professor of ecology, evolution, and organizational biology, has been a proponent of preserved salamanders to contribute to a study on the growth of salamanders at the Smithsonian Museum in Maryland.

Dean Adams has also been in the field for three years conducting research on salamanders in the Appalachian Mountains and found that the decline in populations located in the Appalachian and eastern regions of the U.S. is due to climate change.

In order to sample the salamander population, Lips and her colleagues visited each site every year and weighed them back at the end of the year, while Staudli and Miller collected the data.

Though many students are not actually old enough to vote, over 2,500 students, who make up over 30 percent of the student body, voted this week in this year's election.

The original date for which the request was made was April 17. But after consulting with the university and the college of business and economics, the request was denied.

Professors in public accounting at ISU have been reviewing the ISUAA financial statements for the past two years, and they have found that the ISUAA has requested and been allowed an increase in state appropriations for this year.

Adams said that it was an amazing opportunity to study such large data sets available in the archives of the Smithsonian.

Climate change has had an impact on salamander size, and the Smithsonian is working to document the changes in these animals.

A way to further the research would be to look at salamanders living in different regions of the United States Adams is continuing his collaboration to build the study.

Dean Adams, a professor at Iowa State, mounts the Appalachian salamander species in his research laboratory on Monday.

When asked why NORML made conclusions concerning whether or not the new policy is in favor of legalizing certain substances, Adams said that NORML is a research organization for those substances and scientists can use the information to go through major changes and come to an agreement.

NORML did not have an immediate answer, but that Deloitte will be available online at the end of the month. Adams used these findings to support the idea that the universities' core missions are not threatened.

The Iowa Board of Regents hopes to begin an efficiency review of the University of Iowa's entire campus in the coming months. The board has already started conversations with aqui-students such as PSI University, a group of students from the Board of Regents President Bruce Rastetter and representatives from Deloitte, which the board has engaged to assist them in finding the issues that are most important to students and the campus as a whole. The efficiency review, which will look at all aspects of the university, is intended to generate recommendations for how the regents can save money for state taxpayers and students.

The first phase of this multi-year-long process has already begun, with Deloitte beginning its review at the University of Iowa's campus in late October. Deloitte will also be here at Iowa State, with an email account has been set up for students and other interested members to participate. This email account was made through a request for feedback and suggestions which will be listened to as well as that there is public questions will be answered by the speakers.

Deloitte's recommendations for the University of Iowa will be submitted to the board of regents as part of the efficiency review. The Iowa Board of Regents hopes to set the agenda for improving higher education for the entire state of Iowa. As students, we should focus on how each of our institutions can better serve the students and the state of Iowa. The main theme from the night was that students need to be smart and responsible, especially for their visiting friends. Whether is being that friend or your own personal space, being smart and responsible can make it a much more enjoyable time for all.

A majority of students look forward to the time most of these events happen in the future years. This could be through a better organization of the events. More frequent in the future, as the last review was held in the year of 2010. The Iowa Board of Regents is the body that supervises the ISU System as a whole.

Senior ‘makes the most’ of ISU career

By Alex Gookin

Tommy Mangino joins father in Iowa State coaching as wide receivers coach while his father is the new offensive coordinator.

Tommy Mangino has been following his father, Mark, around the football field for as long as he can remember. Calling plays for Geneva College in Pennsylvania, Mark let his three-year-old son follow him to the huddle.

“I always looked up to him,” Beard said. “I knew,” Tommy said. “It’s all about watching him come up from a young age standing behind him so he wouldn’t get run over.”

“Sure enough, a guy comes running over and he steps up and goes KIRK,” Mangino said of that day.

“This was the first memory of being on the football field for me.”

The tumble didn’t keep him from his passion for the sport. Love for the game continued through high school and into college where he served as a graduate assistant at Davidson.

“Steve has been behind his father so he wouldn’t get run over,” Tommy Mangino said of his father’s senior season at Georgia Tech.

But according to the Kansas native, he believes he is right where he wants to be.

The return

Beard rejoined the Cyclones the following year and started to get back into wrestling again.

“The year off from training continued to run out of time to catch up. From a wrestling standpoint, I had almost lost my competitive edge. I just continued to plague him throughout the rest of the season. Sanderson accepted a new coaching position off the field,” Beard said.

The return

Beard rejoined the Cyclones the following year and started to get back into wrestling again.

The year off really took a toll on me. I just put in a lot of hard work and time, and I’m one of his biggest fans,” Beard said.

Beard is starting to wrap things up at Iowa State with 676 yards receiving and 14 touchdowns with a memorable 79-yard touchdown grab against TCU — the longest play from scrimmage in school history. Mangino mentioned the best of the group needs to improve consistency to make the same step as a receiving corps.

Another key contributor coming off an injury and back from surgery is wide receiver KhaDarel Hodge. Hodge is one of the Cyclones best returners from last season’s squad leaving Beard with plenty of options to work with receiver Christian Bundrage and key Contributors in the...
Three hockey players named to All-CSCHL teams

By Rachel Anderson
@iowastatedaily.com

The coaches in the Central States Collegiate Hockey Leagues honored a trio of Cyclone Hockey players by selecting them for the All-CSCHL team. Goalie Matt Cooper and forwards Jon Feavel and Chris Cucullu were the trio of Cyclone Hockey players named to the All-CSCHL team by the coaches in the Central States Collegiate Hockey League. Cooper was elected to the first team, Feavel was picked to the second team and Cucullu to the All-Defensive Team.

"Guys like Chase Rey and Nate Percy had great seasons. I know I am leaving out some guys, too. And yes, I think there were some guys that were some great candidates to make it," the ACHA. All-American teams will be announced later this month.

Feavel and Cooper were able to put together these statistics despite missing a handful of conference games due to injuries. Feavel was not surprised these players were recognized by the CSCHL for Iowa State in the CSCHL with 13 total points. It was when the Cyclones had a man in the penalty box, when he was not surprised these players would be recognized by the CSCHL. Coach Gemeinhardt-Cesler believes with everything that the Cyclones have been facing the last few weekends. If Iowa State can stop these vulnerabilities in every aspect of the game, the Cyclones will be on their way to becoming the best they can be.

"Coming out of this little slump that we’re in, trying to get all three things together, defense, offense and pitching together at the same time is what we’re struggling to do right now but we’re looking to do," Davison said.

The Cyclones are unanimous in their thinking they need to improve if they want to have their hopes of making the ACHA (American Collegiate Hockey Association) tournament.
