Though the traditional Veishea celebrations are gone, ISU administrators, students and local police departments realize all Veishea traditions have not died.
While opinions on the discontinuation of Veishea vary, the administration at Iowa State sees the end of Veishea as somewhat of a shame, but also an opportunity to try something new and different that better fits the ISU community in 2015.

Tom Hill, senior vice president of student affairs, said the end of Veishea has allowed the administration, faculty and students the ability to look at the needs of modern day students and figure out activities they want at Iowa State in the absence of the spring celebration.

“It won’t be done overnight, and I hope that it does take a little time,” Hill said in reference to new ideas and programs that will be created to fill the Veishea void.

Though many anonymous ISU alumni responses to the Veishea Task Force decision to disband the celebration were mostly in agreement, said ISU President Steven Leath. About 90 percent responded positively saying discontinuing the cel-oration was a shame, but was necessary due to concerns about ISU’s ability to raise money to cover the event’s cost.

But while some former Veishea fans are feeling a void, some ISU alumni say the event was a necessity.

“When you talk about re-planning something, whatever you come up with looks like what you discontinued,” Hill said.

Ames EcoFair welcomes unique businesses...
THE EXPERIMENT
Everyone has experienced those first dates. The awkward silences, hoping you don’t say something dumb, sweaty palms, wondering if you have food stuck in your teeth, not sure if you should offer dessert or even whether to go in for the kiss at the end of the night.
Well, take that awkward first date and multiply it by five. That is what the first-ever 30 Daily Dates participants experienced as they met the individual they would have to be in a relationship with for the next month.
The 10 participants, all ISU students, applied and agreed to go on 30 dates lasting at least 30 minutes each day for 30 days. All the participants were required to document their experiences with questionnaires, photos and videos that will be published in the Iowa State Daily newspaper, website and social media.
The guidelines to this social experiment addressed common struggles and successes experienced in relationships among college students.
This social experiment, which was designed to help college students better understand healthy relationships, is supported by campus partners and local businesses.

LESSON TO BE LEARNED
While the social experiment may seem like a sappy spinoff of “The Bachelor,” it has a much deeper purpose.
In the days where hookups, meeting on Tinder or texting are a normal basis for relationships, the Daily Dates and 30 Daily Dates sponsors wanted to offer students a healthier relationship experience than what is currently the norm.
The elements that constitute a healthy relationship—such as good communication, time commitment and open mindedness—and more easily discussed in practice. Through 30 Daily Dates, the participants were placed in an environment that encouraged them to practice these skills. Their experiences provided a learning opportunity for each couple, but also addressed lessons that every Iowa State student can learn.
There were no expectations or hypotheses associated with this experiment. Outside of the set guidelines, each couple directed the path of their relationship. In the following days, we will show their experience in 30 Daily Dates.
Rather than just writing another article and publishing it in the newspaper, the Daily Dates saw an opportunity to better serve ISU students and help them understand what healthy relationships truly look like.

WHAT TO WATCH FOR
Over the next 15 business days we will highlight the journal entries and confessions of the 30 Daily Daters and profile commonalities that relate to the experiment.
Each day we will publish guest commentary from campus partners who work closely with students. These professionals will share their unique perspectives on helping students to develop healthier relationship habits.
We have built www.30dailydates.com to serve as a setting to both get to know the experiment participants and act as an ongoing resource for those interested in building healthier relationships.

Technology has made a revolution in the way we communicate. It allows us to connect with people all over the world. Almost everything we do now is done online and we rely heavily on our smartphones, tablets, and laptops. Social media has become the most popular platform for communication and entertainment. It has also become a major part of our daily lives.

I joined Twitter when I was 14 years old and since then, I have been an active user. I tweet about every single thing I do, whether it’s taking a shower, what I was eating for lunch, or crossing the road. It becomes easy to lose track of time when we are constantly checking our phones for updates and notifications. This has become a habit that is hard to break.

During my trip to Iowa, I realized how much I was using my phone. I was not able to focus on the more important things in life. I took photos of everything, posted them on Twitter, and then deleted them. I did not even pay attention to the people around me.

I obviously did not have sensible grades started dropping because of my lack of focus. I began to feel isolated and disconnected from the world around me. I decided to take a break from social media and stop tweeting about every little detail. I started concentrating on my work and my grades began to improve. I am very guilty of using social media too much and it has become a distraction for me. I now try to use social media as a meaningful tool to connect with others instead of a distraction.

Social media has a lot of benefits. It allows us to communicate with people all over the world. Although social media has become the most popular platform for communication, it is also a way to share information and express ourselves.

However, there are some drawbacks to using social media. One of the biggest drawbacks is the feeling of being isolated. When we are constantly checking our phones for updates and notifications, it becomes hard to feel connected to the people around us. We rely on social media too much and it becomes a way for us to escape reality.

I have found considerable benefits to using social media as a meaningful tool to connect with others instead of a distraction. I now try to use social media as a meaningful tool to connect with others instead of a distraction. I now try to use social media as a meaningful tool to connect with others instead of a distraction.
ISU football team's evolving personality excites coaches

By Kevin Homer

IOWA STATE DAILY

ISU defensive coordinator Mark Mangino said he was linked to the Iowa State football program by a chance encounter. But he admitted he couldn’t recognize Mangino shortly after the 2015 spring practices began.

“His facial movements have genuine enthusiasm and a real bunter. I think that last year . . . a few guys fooled me.,” Mangino said. “They jumped up and down and cheered and everything in that manner. But right then and there, we got our butts pinned under our shoulders, and they stumbled.”

Of course, Mangino’s speaking about almost every player from last year’s ISU football team, as many of them are part of what the coaching group is in agreement for a younger player makeup after the program has assumed this new look.

Mangino made his debut as the Cyclones defensive coordinator last year. He spent seven years as the head coach at Kansas, where he led the Jayhawks to a 2014 Big 12 South champion title.

“I’m not saying every guy last year was like that, no, but the culture of this guy last year was like that, poised for a resurgent personality and in a different direction,” Mangino said. “He’s still trying to evolve his personality and in a different direction.”

ISU defensive coordinator Wally Burnham was a defensive coordinator and defensive back coach at Kansas State for a total of two years.

“We have a good class coming in,” said freshman Hilary Green. “There’s a lot more in store for us and I hope we know that. We have a good class coming in next year and we’re going to get tough.”

Last season, Iowa State had too much enthusiasm and a work ethic, but, for this current gymnastics program, they’re not lacking in either. The Cyclones can continue to look forward with hope for the future.

But as the boxers prepared for the second sparring match of the year, they spoke about the many benefits of boxing.

“Tid Harvest did a lot yesterday,” said Harris. “He got his ticket to Fort Worth — a national title. But as the boxers pre-}
The intramural program is also giving mentor students an ability to gain leadership experience within their organization, Hill said.

"We have all these weekend events. We're not going to be able to do anything without them. They think about what really kind of soured the mood of the crowd. I think that really kind of soured the criminal side, but if a student gets in trouble on those weekends, we're going to take action. We're going to make that happen," Tuttle said.

The department also works closely with the Student Organizations Office to keep them updated on issues made "sober and accountable not only from the criminal side, but if a student gets in trouble on those weekends, we're going to take action. We're going to make that happen," Tuttle said.

Hill Police and Ames Police are still working closely with students and the Ames community safe during the last of the spring semester and went through their annual crowd control training last week.

We have to look at it from a different angle. Last year, we chose not to bring in these two teams because we go right to the trough," Hill said. "Let's move on," Hill said. "The student body will not be happy if they think there is a need for significant if it happens hanging on to something that is no longer."
