Iowa Straw Poll under fire

By Thaddeus Maert

@iowastatedaily.com

The Iowa straw poll, one of the most popular Republican political events in Presidential election cycles, is now under fire from Gov. Terry Branstad. In August 2011, first the political campaigning started to take over billboards and television commercials, followed by the Republican presidential candidates coming to Ames to Iowa Straw Poll. But Branstad wants to cancel it.

Branstad, junior in political science, does not see that as enough reason to stop the Straw Poll. "So, I think that the Iowa Republican Party is going to keep the Ames Straw Poll," Branstad said. "They make way too much money to stop it without a good reason.""I think that it's probably going to be amended only because it's a fundraising opportunity," Shelley said. "That's where it began in the first place in the late '80s. It was a way to try to attract candidates who would invest money and other supporters, who would invest money in their campaign and spend it in Iowa. It's basically designed as a way to raise revenue for the Republican Party. That's one of the main ways the state party generates money.

"The Straw Poll gets so much money, because every person who votes has to get a ticket, which can cost approximately $30.

"You have to walk up to Michael Huckabee and vote for Huckabee; you have to vote for Mitt Romney; they would give you a kit list to get in to the Straw Poll," Drahos said. "The fundraising part of this is that someone hasn't to pay for those tickets to get in, so you just don't have to pay for those. What happens is that the campaign pays up those tickets in advance. The Iowa Straw Poll is an expensive cost to space, such as the parking lot and the grounds surrounding Hilton Coliseum."
In addition to the three boilers, Wilson mentioned that Iowa State is installing one coal-fired stoker boiler with three new gas-fired boilers. The project would help the university achieve its goal of getting 50 percent of Iowa State’s energy from renewable sources. Opinion

The Des Moines Register

Monday, December 2, 2013

While Phil Brown does a good job of making his point that horse slaughter in the U.S. is a cruel, predatory and unnecessary practice, I would like to offer a different perspective.

Horse slaughter is a issue that has been brought to the forefront of the public eye in recent years. However, the issue of horse slaughter has been around for much longer than many people realize.

Blood flows, and in the process, living beings are killed. This is a fact of life. It is easy to forget this fact in the midst of a heated debate.

But when we consider the issue of horse slaughter, we must remember that every life lost is a life that could have been lived. Every life lost is a life that could have been spent enjoying the company of others.

In conclusion, horse slaughter is a cruel and unnecessary practice. It is time that we put an end to it.

Cyclones grab All-Big 12 honors

Five ISU football players were named to the Big 12 All-Conference team for the 2011 season.

The selections include:

1. Nose tackle Jake McDonough
2. Defensive end Van Loo
3. Cornerback Kelechi Osemele
4.安全 guard Brandon White
5. Quarterback Jared Barnett

The Cyclones finished the 2011 season with a record of 6-6 and 3-6 in Big 12 Conference play.

Cyclones growing as team hits midseason

By Glyn Colle

www.iowastatedaily.com

As the midseason point of the season approaches, the ISU hockey team is looking to build on its success so far this season.

While the team has missed some key players due to injury, they have been able to play well in games where they have been healthy.

The Cyclones have won six of their last seven games, and are currently in fourth place in the Central Collegiate Hockey Association.

If they can continue their recent success, they have a chance to make some noise in the CCCHA tournament.

Jack Trice named ‘Field of the Year’

By Jack Hunt

www.iowastatedaily.com

Jack Trice Stadium has been named the ‘Field of the Year’ by the National Sports Turf Managers Association.

The award is given to the best college football field in the nation.

The Cyclones have played three games this season at Trice Stadium, and have an overall record of 2-1 at home.

If they can continue their success this season, they have a chance to make a run in the Big 12 Conference.

Murdoch says Cyclones must learn to play without Poppens

By Hallie Christofferson

www.iowastatedaily.com

Hallie Christofferson, who is averaging 16.6 points per game, said the Cyclones must learn to adjust to playing without leading scorer Chelsea Poppens.

“If someone else comes to the fore, I think we can still compete,” Christofferson said. “We just have to adjust, but I’m confident we can do it.”

The Cyclones have been able to adjust to the loss of Poppens so far this season, but they will need to continue to do so if they want to compete for a spot in the NCAA tournament.

Hockey

Weis is probably golfing now

By Jake Calhoun

www.iowastatedaily.com

There is a possibility that Iowa State’s Josh Weis may be playing golf instead of football.

Weis is a senior defensive back for the Cyclones, and has been listed as probable to play against West Virginia.

If Weis is indeed playing golf, it will be the first time this season that he has been listed as probable to play.

Ames: Ready for an industry?

By Dominic Spaziani

Musician Nate Logsdon feels city music scene is expanding

The Ames music scene has thrived for years and in the past five decades, it’s one that has connected with its neighboring Des Moines music scene and become home to many artists and bands.

Many venues, recording studios, and record labels aside, the Ames music scene has grown to be more than aspiring musicians but the work of business professionals that can only lead to one destination: a music industry.

Nate Logsdon is a vocalist and trumpet player for the Ames band Mumford’s, creator of the Maximum Ames Music Festival. He recently wrote an article on the future of the Ames music scene and presented it on the Ames247.com.

Mumford’s Nate Logsdon, vocalist and trumpet player, leads the band during Maximum Ames Music Festival. Logsdon said Ames is ready to expand its music scene into a bigger industry.
