We must be committed to a meaning of globalization,” he said. “Certainly it needs to be a coherent, organic, university-wide effort.”

There were several critical questions regarding how students get involved with globalization in both the curriculum and the educational sphere. He believes to globalization-orientation, life-exploring advantage through innovation, capital and leisure-time. This continuous self-stimulates in the US, and it’s the adaptation it retains, especially regarding university investment and innovation.

“We talked about innovation being critically important,” he said. “It implies working outside of the box. We’re going to have to keep the same result.”

“Part of Subbaswamy’s plan for innovation is to reach out to universities abroad in order to keep up with globalization.”

“The challenge is the changing world, when so many universities are trying to make American partners, is trying to make strategic relationships,” he said. “Subbaswamy continued to state that cementing economic strengths is one of the problems in education.

“At the same time that demand is growing, the state contributions to education, is declining,” Subbaswamy said. “He also stated that the system is over-researched, and therefore hurting investment and student-oriented education funding.”

Despite the economic struggles, Subbaswamy emphasized the importance of research institutions in the increasingly globalized world. “Universities are trying to make American partners, is trying to make strategic relationships,” he said. “Subbaswamy continued to state that cementing economic strengths is one of the problems in education.

ISU presidential candidate Kumble Subbaswamy addresses research and education in the developing world and increasingly globalized economy Thursday at the forum in Morrill Hall. The other candidate, Steven Leath, will speak at 3:45 p.m. Friday in 2019 Morrill Hall.

ISU presidential candidate Kumble Subbaswamy was on campus Thursday after visiting Iowa State Monday afternoon. He is one of two candidates vying for the next potential president.

Subbaswamy began his presentation at the open forum by discussing the importance of research and education for the 21st century, particularly with regards to the developing world and globalization.

“We must be committed to a meaning of globalization,” he said. “Certainly it needs to be a coherent, organic, university-wide effort.”

A sunny, fall day with a slight breeze from the northwest. Mostly sunny skies with an increase in winds throughout the day.

Much of the same can be expected as high pressure dominates Iowa.

Agriculture: Researchers combat rootworm

By Shuyang Gu

Iowa State researchers are working on possible solutions to a western corn rootworm that is resistant to genetically modified corn.

Butcher Thompson (Ph.D) produces corn traits that are resistant to many species of insects. But the western corn rootworm, or corn rootworm, has found ways to overcome these resistance traits.

Corn rootworms, which can feed on the roots of corn, are a significant pest in many regions of the world, including Iowa. The insects cause damage by feeding on the roots of corn plants, which can affect plant growth and yield.

Iowa State University researchers have been studying ways to combat this pest for years. Their latest research, published in the journal Plant Biotechnology Journal, shows that they have found a new way to combat the pest by using modified corn plants.

The research team used modified corn plants that were resistant to the western corn rootworm. They discovered that these modified plants were able to outcompete the wild-type rootworm population, leading to reduced infestations and increased yields.

The study also found that the modified plants had higher levels of certain amino acids, which are important for plant health and growth.

In conclusion, the research team's findings suggest that modified corn plants could be a promising tool for controlling the western corn rootworm. Further studies are needed to determine the long-term effects of using these modified plants in agriculture.

Perry unable to manage his own state

Republicans have spent quite a bit of time during the campaign questioning the qualifications of President Barack Obama's health care plan. Specifically, they have accused Obama of using the government to take over the private health care industry.

Rick Perry has been clear in his intentions: he does not want to see the government have any role in ensuring that every American is covered. He also has said that he would prefer to use the federal government as a tool to help states work together to ensure that all people in every state can access health care.

Perry's stance is not the only one that is taking a stand on this issue. President Barack Obama has also said that he would like to see the government play a larger role in ensuring that everyone has access to health care.

The debate over health care has been ongoing for many years. In the past, there have been several attempts to pass legislation that would provide health care coverage to all Americans. However, these efforts have been met with resistance from many people, including some politicians.

One of the main arguments against expanding health care coverage is that it would be too expensive. However, many experts believe that the cost of not providing health care coverage is even higher. In fact, studies have shown that people who are uninsured are more likely to become sick and to die prematurely.

Another argument against expanding health care coverage is that it would be too difficult to implement. However, there are already several countries that have successfully implemented universal health care programs. In these countries, people have access to a wide range of health care services, including surgeries, doctor visits, and hospital stays.

Despite these arguments, many people believe that the current system is not working for everyone. They believe that it is time for the government to take a more active role in ensuring that everyone has access to health care.

The debate over health care coverage will continue for some time. However, it is clear that there is a growing sense of urgency among many people to find a solution that will work for everyone.

I am interested in knowing why we canceled and postponed interviews for our next university president in the Midwest and why?

What's going on at Iowa State? Are we not interested in interviewing from other schools, or is that not the way things are done in Iowa State? Is it possible that we are not interested in interviewing from outside since Iowa State has one of the top 10 most beautiful campuses in the country. We want to be on the cutting edge of what is happening.

I hope that it is not the case that we are not interested in interviewing the best candidates for our next president and that we hope to find the best person to lead us forward. Pamela Holt is a graduate student in English.

Cycles ceese success despite turnovers

A bye week came with improbable results for Iowa State's Women's Volleyball team, which has emerged from a monosotone schedule that had combined losses of 23-15 one season ago.

In its 24-1 victory over last year's Iowa State (0-13-10) for the first time in six years and three turnovers — all of which were intercepted by Iowa State's head coach Paul Rhoads.

However, the Cyclones did not put the setbacks behind as much as they did in the conference.

This week was the first for the Big 12, as the conference heads into the Big 12 Conference final round, which is held on the road.

The Big 12 rights revenue from its Fox Sports contract evenly, which is enough for the conference to be able to accommodate a loss of revenue from the conference.

The Big 12 will always be a key to keeping the conference going, which is why every year the conference has a key to the conference.

Iowa State had a bye week before taking on Texas on Oct. 1.

Nebraska (Big Ten) and Oklahoma (Big 12) are the two schools that are guaranteed to be in the conference for the next four years.

Texas Tech leads the all-time series, 20-17-4, but the Cyclones have swept the Big 12 two seasons, Iowa State has one sweep.

After the Pac-12 announcement Tuesday it would not be until 2017 before Iowa State, Oklahoma, Texas and Texas Tech would play.

Cyclones go south for Big 12 play

By Cory Weaver
@iowastatedaily.com

The ISU soccer team heads south this weekend to kick off its Big 12 conference schedule against Texas A&M and Texas.

Last season, the Cyclones (9-4, 1-0 Big 12) took Longhorns (7-2) by a 3-0 score. However, coach Wendy Dillinger believes they have what it takes to flip those results this year.

“We got to see that early goal, if we get a chance and take advantage of net poses and corner kicks, which is something we’ve done better this year,” Dillinger said. “I think we have a more pacey and forward-facing line that can create goals and have the quality to give us some momentum.”

Iowa State won its no-conference match last season against Kansas, but then went on to lose its next seven conference games after a 13-1 beatdown of Oklahoma State.

“We just have to take advantage of our chances, and once we give the opportunities, we have to finish them,” Dillinger said.

The first game is Friday night at 6:30 p.m. against Texas A&M (6-3-1) in College Station, Texas. A win against the Aggies last season slipped through Iowa State’s grasp.

“If this year’s contest goes the same way, we have to prepare for that, but yet Dillinger said their game plan wouldn’t be much different.

That’s the biggest thing is just turn and run at us and force them to be under pressure, don’t let them take control of the ball, block the service,” Dillinger said. “The thing we want to do is we want to force them to go to serve, forcing them to stay wide and doing a good job one-on-one, putting them on a one touch and then out.

“Defensively, we really need to focus on our outside backs, making sure they are doing a good job one-on-one, making sure they stay wide and when they go to serve, don’t let them get an easy pass to serve.”

After their game against the Aggies, the Cyclones travel to Austin, Texas, to face the Longhorns Sunday at 1 p.m.

Sophomore forward Jennifer Dominguez said getting ready for a strong start is key.

“Every game you have to give your all,” Domiguez said. “The thing we need to focus on our outside backs, making sure they are doing a good job one-on-one, making sure they stay wide and when they go to serve, don’t let them get an easy pass to serve.”

Along with Dominguez, the Aggies have also allowed 19 goals this season to lead the conference, and Dillinger said the Cyclones plan to exploit that statistic.

“We need to focus on our outside backs, making sure they are doing a good job one-on-one, forcing them to stay wide, and then when they go to serve, don’t let them get an easy pass to serve,” Dillinger said. “The thing we want to do is we want to force them to go to serve, forcing them to stay wide and doing a good job one-on-one."
