A 21-year-old Ames man was reported missing Wednesday night by his father and friends who have not been able to contact him since Jan. 31. Thomas Dooley was reported missing by his father, said Geoff Huff, investigations commander for Ames Police Department. At the time of his disappearance, Dooley had last been seen in front of the joint and appeared of his own volition. She pressed charges, Huff said. "I'm his ex-girlfriend. I pressed charges," Huff said. "I'm the reason that he's missing." Huff appeared of his own volition. She pressed charges, Huff said. "I'm his ex-girlfriend. I pressed charges," Huff said. "I'm the reason that he's missing." Huff.

The former girlfriend of the missing man said she may know where and why he disappeared. "I've been calling his phone, and I've been getting busy signals," she said. The College of Business CBIZ Lab program kickstarted with the start of the spring semester. CBIZ lab allows students to work with professionals in historic real-life situations as part of their education at Iowa State.

Last fall, at the beginning of the program, CBIZ hired four graduate students to set up the lab and establish the program. Underscores students have been hired to date, and the program is looking to have a total of eight students within the program. The graduate students are essentially the team leaders and they help with specific business projects while also managing the program.

There is a wide spread of skills on the team, as well. The students do not need to be a business major, but they do need to find interest and desire to participate in the program. Students tend to have a range of skills and interest, and the grad students can assist them to help enhance their learning experience.

Business cases have been in the classroom settings for many years but the program allows students to obtain more experience. The cases are great for students because there is nothing more rewarding than taking what you have learned in the classroom and applying it to real life,” said Zach Lenhart, junior in supply chain management.

Currently, CBIZ is working with Weather Underground, a company that provides a collection of data and analysis including the names and values of the clients.

Some projects might include market analysis, industry research and financial analysis.

“The program allows us to organize the clients in one central place,” Tyco said. “This gives more opportunities for projects.”

Both parties benefit from the program. Companies receive a fresh team of business students that are interacting with clients. The company has “new eyes” without having to hire a full-time employee.

“The program is a great benefit in network- ing,” said Alex Andrade, graduate student.

Zack Lenhart, junior in supply chain management and Alex Andrade, graduate student, are apart of CBIZ lab and are working to network and build their skills for the real world.
"I’m pleased that in just a year-and-a-half, we’ve raised over $70 million of it," said Mayor, ’90, president Municipal Union, residence halls, Oakes Parking and Dining, in a Malcolm X keynote speech.

Leath addressed his presence he made last year to raise $150 million in scholarship money over the next five years. "I’m pleased to say that after a half a year we’ve already raised over $70 million of it," Leath said.

"I gave people $100 million dollars, in sooner than five years. I keep going. Most of that money comes from others," A major issue plaguing ISU has been financial accessibility, which has been addressed by the Department of Residence Student Services.

Leath added additional statistics, with plans to increase the number of student residents by 1,000 percent, and 1,000 waypoints, and hopping to increase capacity by half we’ve already raised $150 million dollars in the next five years. Rock-reggae groups Passafire and Ballyhoo! are set to join the Maintenance Shop with some islanded proven son as part of their Brediffins tour 8 p.m. Feb. 20 with opening act, Scratch. Savannah, Ga.-based Passafire has a lot of rock, reggae and reggae roots. “It’s reggae with a lot of rock; it’s a rock with a lot of reggae,” said singer Kubley. “You could call it reggae-roots rock.”

Passafire was started by Savannah College of Art and Design students Ted Freeno and Kubley as an extracurricular activity.

“Me and Ted, the singer, went to college together,” Kubley said. “We started playing together, and in 2005 we formed a band. We got him out of high school. His name was inspired by reggae’s legend Bob Marley.”

“This is a Bob Marley album called ‘Catch a Fire,’” Kubley said. “We thought it was inspired by reggae’s roots. We got him out of high school, and we started playing together, and we just went with it. We just recorded a bunch of songs and went with it. We just wanted to name it that Exactly, so we went with Passafire.”

Kubley said. “We just wanted to name it that exactly, so we went with Passafire.”

Passafire has released five albums so far, which will release in 2006 and leading up to their most recent record, “Vistas,” which was released in November. Passafire has recorded with the latest album, “Vistas,” that is. They make songs along with all of us. In return, Kubley said. “We just wanted to keep going in the direction that we started going in with ‘Start from Scratch,’ and we wanted to go that direction further.”

While energetic albums like “Passafire” by Passafire in corporate reggae sound horribly from the punk spectrum. “It’s punk-rock-reggae type music,” said Freeno. “Passafire” by Passafire. “It was more chill than the best for the record. We just recorded a bunch of songs and went with it. We just wanted to name it that exactly, so we went with Passafire.”
