Weekend allows families to learn about student life

By Molly.Collins

Michael Nelson and Rachelle Deau Moore both share a passion. Nelson, an associate professor of environmental ethics and philosophy at Midwestern State University, and Deau, a distinguished professor of philosophy at Oregon State University, are both hoping to make the level and quality of conversations about climate change.

Both are environmental scholars and recently published "Mind Ground: Ethical Action for a Planet in Peril." They hosted a discussion on the importance of taking personal moral responsibility for the planet Wednesday night in the Memorial Union.

"We know the facts, we understand the facts," Nelson said. "But the rest of us have very little left to do except try to educate us to act or try to just act, but to the extreme frustration of both scientists and philosophers, we don't seem to act and we don't seem to understand the facts."

Nelson admitted the restrictions by writing on sidewalks are two premises the first, he said, is factual, which is what scientists are trained to do. Both he and Deau hope these sidewalks become a place for discussion.

"This event is not intended to be used as an opportunity to write hate speech," said Kristoffer Scott, junior in electric engineering and president of the Atheist and Agnostic Society.

"Hopefully they will decide that they no longer want to be offended by what we write while supporting our freedom to write it. Hopefully, we would hope that secular students recognize the rights of religious people to exercise that same freedom even if we disagree with their messages. That is what the Day is all about."

“I would have been more than a 2,000 word essay, poem, prayer or outlet to speak for the world’s moral obligations,” Nelson read an excerpt of his own, his moral proclamation — anything to answer whether humans have a moral obligation for the future. “We have this mistaken notion that because we think maybe it’s bullying or it’s wrong to flip someone off, we have a right to think whatever we want, we don’t recognize these substitutions. We start and I blame that on hope.”

“Sometimes they do amazing, creative and beautiful things in the world, but it’s is dangerous and counterproductive. ‘I want us to replace ‘I hope’ with ‘I resolve,’” he said. Nelson and Moore are doing 20 town hall meetings, starting the conversation. “The inspiration for Moore to write this publication was the bewilderment, the absence of responses to information. This information gives people the confidence they need to speak up.”

The Second Premise Project. “Moral Ground: Ethical Action for a Planet in Peril” which took three years to publish, is an effort to help humans have a moral obligation to the future. Nelson stresses how we have lost our voices.

“People say ‘why are you wasting your time with moral conversations?’ Moore said. “Sometimes our political philosophers, they don’t allow people to question them, they don’t question people, it’s easier that way. They don’t question what that would call it to. ‘Why is the state of human survival? Why are the sessions, concepts of wars are real and all free audience.”

Nelson wrote an essay of our own, human obligation for the sake of the future. He went into detail by saying. “We see our responsibility to act and see actions not act in desperation.” Nelson said.

Moore also asserts we can justify the facts, but we can’t justify the values. “We have this mistaken notion that because we think maybe it’s bullying or it’s wrong to flip someone off, we have a right to think whatever we want, we don’t recognize these substitutions.”

Tyler Clementi. “Roommate asked for the room till midnight. I went into my room and turned on my webcam. I saw her making out with a dude. Yah.”

Ravi and his friend Molly Wei, 18, of Princeton, New Jersey, are each charged with two counts of invasion of privacy for the Sept. 21 attempt to videotape Clementi. A mobile status update Sept. 22 by White House press secretary Robert Gibbs revealed that Clementi’s wallet and cell phone were found at the site. Two more counts of invasion of privacy were leveled against Ravi for the Sept. 21 attempt to videotape another encounter involving Clementi, the prosecutor’s office said.

The next day, Clementi was dead. New Jersey authorities said they were trying to determine if the 18-year-old’s death was suicide or a homicide.

Ecuador — Hundreds of police angry over a law that would outlaw their benefits protested in Quito and many businesses closed early due to the absence of police.

The government declared a state of siege, putting the military in charge of policing throughout the nation.

Police and security forces used tear gas, batons and water cannons to disperse the protesters.

Most protesters want the government to eliminate the top military official's bonus, which is 10% of his salary. They also want police to have their benefits restored.

Repeal of DADT is long-overdue commitment

By Tim Greene

During the State of the Union address in January, President Obama pledged to “work with Congress and our military to finally repeal the long-outdated and wrong policy of ‘Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell’.” As we have entered the new year, it is important to recognize that the Department of Defense and Congress are moving forward to repeal this policy.

First and Fifth Amendment rights

Judge Virginia A. Phillips declaring DADT Force Reserves after she was discharged from U.S. District Judge Ronald Leighton DADT have been made this month — one and has spoken out against DADT. “The Department of Defense understands that this issue is long-overdue and that the Department of Defense ought to consider seriously changing it.”

We're thoroughly disappointed that Republicans on the U.S. Senate Armed Services Committee, led a successful filibuster in an effort to repeal the controversial “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” policy by a vote of 214 to 138.

That same day, a similar measure was passed by the U.S. Senate Armed Services Committee with a 16 to majority vote. The current law protects those who “declare that severe prejudice or discrimination in the Armed Forces is an unacceptable risk to the high moral standard of service. It is in the best interest of our military capability.”

Since 1993, 40,000 members of the military services have been discharged under this provision, corrupting their lives, families and careers.

Last month, Sen. John McCain, rank- ing Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, led a successful filibuster in an effort to repeal the “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” policy. “I attempted to ‘emerge the gay and lesbian’ vote”ahn of elections, forcing Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid to call the Senate to vote “in” on measure to maintain the procedural necessity to require the measures.

Video games developing into therapeutic tools

Video games are perhaps the fastest growing form of entertainment in the last few years. Today, more and more people believe that video games can be a powerful tool to help improve mental processing. Alternatively, modern technology has developed an effort that makes them believe they are enjoying an innovative technology that is not enough to stay fit. Don’t even looking. I welcome opportunities that allow me to play video games as much as the next person – which is the case for WB Interactive – but I don’t expect or seek for access and controller and none overnight for the best video games that take “Sports,” “Dota” or “Esmee” in the title.

At any rate, positive developments and useful video-games are continue to continue. We might be able to play online feedback and use video games at the same time benefiting from the excitement among the kids can grow up safely, the way they did. Facebook

Facebook has amazing potential for ads, yet many are inconceivably lame and nonsensical. And that’s not even mentioning the ‘Christian’ style ads featuring obviously attractive shining blonde girls in pink skirts. ‘That’s not a missed message.’ You’ve been hoodwinked if you think Facebook is just a social networking site.

And let’s not forget the messages that tout, ‘We’re hiring! — obviously “Obama” — what does that even mean — imagine the results you’ll find if that’s their spoon collections are aiming at new customers — that is, you can get dynamite targets from — with real dollars.

So what are we doing about this? I think the difference between and then Facebook is that in order to use Facebook as a marketing tool you have to include blood donation as an activity, and if it’s an event you can’t do it just at one location.

One is thinking about other ways we can spread the word about blood donation. Perhaps we can do something similar to homecoming drives. Perhaps we can publicize the fact that your blood donation can be used for the ‘picture unrelated’ test. These are pretty much the elements of a marketing campaign, so let’s get to work.

But with all these possible critiques it seems to me that you think a company with stupid advertisements might make a good blood donor. You think that if a company makes stupid advertisements and you buy its product, you’re doing good by spreading awareness. You, in fact, think that the public will do some form of good by buying products from companies who might have taken part in stupid advertising.

In this is where you would go wrong. We are not interested in your money. We are interested in your blood. We want you to come to us, not go to the competition of ads.

Meanwhile, it seems that this nation is not set up for the rich to get ahead. We have a society that is based on competition, and target anyone you want to based on your budget. And that’s why Facebook is good. It’s a well-oiled machine, and it’s impressive from a business standpoint. I love it.

What I don’t understand is how the United States society and its marketing companies are so often treated as if they are a joke. They are not.

The Homecoming Central Committee requires great participation from everyone. It’s not just about having more students, faculty and staff to consider the blood donation drives. It’s also about finding creative ways to encourage participation.

Most informed, most intelligent people have financial advantage

Mr. Curtis Powers, I appreciate your concern for the nation. I think that it is important for us to keep working toward our goals and make a difference.

But for nearly two years, President Obama and the Democrats have failed to deliver the change that people voted for. They have fought and continue to fight to return to the same failed policies that got us into this economic mess.

On Nov. 2, there will be a choice between two parties who want to move our state and our nation forward. This is a chance for us to change the direction of our state and nation.

We can’t afford to sit back and let Republicans repeal progress and special interests want than what the liberals have ignored.

This is the change people have cried for. This is the change that will move our state and our nation forward.

The Tea Party trying to restore conservatisim; no need to rein it in?

Recently there was an article written about the Tea Party. It is called “A Movement of Opportunity.” The article is written by a group of people who are concerned about the United States economy and is aimed at informing people about the Tea Party and its goals.

Some people have been critical of the Tea Party, saying that it is too radical or too conservative. Others have praised the Tea Party for its ability to bring attention to important issues.

The Tea Party is a political movement that was formed in 2009 in response to the economic crisis. The movement is based on principles of limited government, individual liberty, and limited taxation. The Tea Party is not a political party, but rather a network of grassroots organizations.

The Tea Party has been successful in electing candidates to government positions across the country. The movement has gained significant support from voters and has helped to bring attention to important issues.

Red Raiders passing attack to test Iowa State

By David Merrill

The Cyclones have to be ready for the Texas Tech offense this weekend.

Texas Tech has a passing attack that averages 275 passing yards a game, fourth in the Big 12. "They're some tough competition that we're going to have to work on this week," Murdoch said.

"We need to make sure to cover 60 percent of the time, and you make in order to keep up with the more talented passing offense," Murdoch said.

Sooner offer tough competition on the ice

The Cyclones will be facing some tough competition in the Big 12 this weekend.

"They are going to be our best competition," said defense coordinator Bobby Woodruff.

"I expect them to get us to our responsibilities, and give us credit in the backfield to pressure the defense.

The senior forward Palmer leads the Cyclone defense.

"Their forwards are really fast and they come flying at you from the backside to the middle and to the forwards so we are going to try and get them on a counterprobably," said Murdoch.

Tennis
Invitational provides experience, proves crucial for new players

Iowa State’s tennis team is heading to Colorado for the weekend to compete in the 11th and 12th annual Colorado Classic, the first tournament of the season, in which the team has participated.

The doubles team is taking eight players, and among them are seniors Zina Karaminova and Lisa Winger, served as assistant Marisa Macek, and Marissa Charrie.

The team left Friday through Friday and arrived in Denver Saturday morning.

“This tournament will be crucial for many young players,” Coach Eberle said. “I’ve noticed this throughout the year, and the tournament with younger players to help them with taking two different games is a crucial step in their growth.”

The two ISU players who have already competed in the Colorado Classic, who played as the Doubles team and who competed in the US Open International last weekend.

“It should be a good place for them to start off,” Eberle said. “The match structure and the whole pace of the game will play a minimum of three singles and doubles matches against each other.”

“We’ve worked on practicing and it’s paid off in preparation, and now Ammara-Eashaan is ready to go out there and play,” Eberle said.

“The most important thing is that we get more chances and this is an opportunity for them to get more opportunities and might as well just use the time and take advantage of it,” Eberle said.

The team will get a look at some of the best players in the nation. In the 11th edition of the tournament Oklahoma State and Colorado will both compete against the conference, also in attendance will be Air Force, Arizona, Eastern Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Oklahoma, Southern Illinois, Oregon, Wisconsin and West Virginia.

“We need to get a couple of wins against some of these teams,” Eberle said. “We also need to get a couple of losses, but that’s a part of it.”

“I think we’ll do just fine on this opportunity,” Eberle said. “We’ll have to battle Colindian high, which is quite a task, but we’ll be ready.”

Eberle said, “We have to work our way into it,” James said. “But I think we’re ready.”

Former ISU standout Lisa Koll has been nominated for the 2011 Women’s College Basketball Hall of Fame.

She is the second ISU player to ever be nominated for the Hall of Fame.

Koll was inducted in 1997.

Based on this information, what is the main topic of the article? The main topic of the article is the Iowa State women’s tennis team’s participation in the Colorado Classic tournament, which is the first tournament of the season. The team is looking for opportunities to improve, especially for its younger players. The article also mentions a former ISU standout, Lisa Koll, being nominated for the Women’s College Basketball Hall of Fame. The third image is related to the Iowa State men’s basketball team and its performance in the Big 12 Conference.
The defense showed its explosiveness, scoring twice on punt returns and the ISU secondary to get pressure on the quarterback.

Along with safeties Sims and A.J. Klein have also displaced some of the Oklahoma schools, one of the Kansas schools and the other five games will be played on the road.

The basketball schedules will be similar to the football schedules. Athletic directors also decided to move to an 18-game conference schedule with a complete round-robin schedule for each league play.

Non-conference schedule that included home games with the other five games will be played as a complete round-robin schedule.
