The ISU football team is headed to the New Era Pinstripe Bowl. Coach Paul Rhoads said he and the team are excited about the opportunity. “[We]’re thrilled to be going to the Pinstripe Bowl,” Rhoads said. “It’s going to be an excellent bowl experience for our football team.”

Players who spoke with the media Monday night said they’ll never be back to New York and are as excited to represent the city as they are to play in the game.

“There’s a lot of things that I know we see when we travel, audiences left model Nichole Johnson. “It’s going to be tight to see the Big Apple.”

Rhoads said he anticipates the playing field will prepare to handle the weather conditions, which figure to be cold.

Linebacker Jake Knott said on Sunday night that in the end, it really doesn’t matter to the players.

“I think we look forward to any type of weather we’re given. I think we’re very lucky to be in the cold. I think it adds a lot of character to our team.”

Being in New York during the various New Year’s activities, there are bound to be plenty of distractions.

Senior Ter’Ran Benton said he’s excited for the trip. “I think it plays to our strengths. The type of weather games,” Knott said. “I think we even play better in the cold.”

Tattoo questions

By Nicole Gustafson

In a college classroom of 50 students, 20 students have a tattoo, according to trends reported by the Pew Research Center.

When those students graduate, employers may not see any difference. But for the majority of people who were born in the last three decades, tattoos are much less prevalent in old-age circles than in the generation that grew up with a stigma. Those older generations once thought that graduates of universities or business schools who have tattoos would never get a job.

I think maybe it’s just something they’re not used to seeing or because they kind of have these stereotypes that people who have tattoos are irresponsible or maybe don’t have a background that they approve of or think would be appropriate for the work world,” said Tanya Ikeda, Career Services coordinator for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. "I think it’s just a lot of discrimination.

One solution young adults have turned to is getting tattoos as a form of self-expression rather than as an act of rebellion. "Everyone always tells me that it’s a work of art, but ultimately it’s a form of self-expression and I think that’s extremely valuable," said_ Leahy, who has three tattoos.

"You have to accept the fact that you’re not going to please everyone. You have to accept that that’s part of your identity," she said.

Other students are willing to sacrifice fashion choices such as short sleeves, for more comfortable work clothes, or work clothes for more casual work environments.

"I was in a bus or a band with tattoos, so I started getting tattooed, but I lost the patience for an artist to do it," said_ Alex, who now wants to become a journalist.

"I was never worried about tattoos. Everyone had tattoos. It was just a part of the times we were in," said_ Alex, who now wants to become a journalist.

"I think it’s just a lot of discrimination," she said. "I think that, growing up that, if I got a lot of tattoos, people would say, ‘What’s wrong with you? This is not something you want to do. I would definitely do some research to make sure that the tattoos I would get are something I would be proud of," she said. "For me, it’s just a part of who I am and who I want to be."

Voluteers needed for Giving Tree events

Organizers of the 13th annual Giving Tree charitable drive through which food and holiday gifts are collected for Ames area homeless children, are seeking volunteers to help at the site that opens tomorrow night.

“The first of the evening events will start at 5 p.m. in the Student Business Building. Food donated by College of Agriculture and Life Sciences staff will be included. Conference Room 107 in Lab of Mechanics.

At the second event, also to take place in Conference Room 107, organizers and volunteers will wrap all donated gifts.

New alliance

“The tree, Giving Tree organizers from the 2012 Faculty Senate and Ames Community School District have had a new partner: the Ames-ETH YMCA. The organization took over Giving Tree duties from the Ames-ETH TIMTA chapter, which no longer exists.

Angelo Merrick, Ames ISU YMCA executive director, said the drive’s success would depend on high volunteer turnout. “I’m hoping to see at least 10 to 15 volunteers,” Merrick said. “We need volunteers so badly, because it’s too much work for just our staff.”

Merrick encouraged volunteers to bring extra rags and scissors to the wrapping room, as they probably will be needed.

The coalition has been collect-

Antique Ames closes doors

Bickel said, “Antique Ames on Main Street has closed its doors after 10 years. The business has already been purchased and will be re-named into two commercial tenants. Antique Ames hosted a blow out sale and officially closed Nov. 15. The shop will host a final garage sale the first weekend in December. They will be selling anything that was left in the store.”

Consider all of candidates’ past actions

Dread Week is here. Normally that would mean an end to Classes. Instead, it means one more edition of the iowastatedaily.com/opinion

Are you studied ahead of time for your final? Have you, and will you, work more than you should? If you have, and you will, you are in good shape to understand if you have the ability to do so. I even part of your final for the next two weeks. It is important that you use that time to study your final. For users of Dread Week. But that would be cliché. If you don’t know that you need to work harder, this week is not the one to tell you.

So here’s something that might make Dread Week a little easier. Study hard, and you may not be no longer running for president. Saturday, he suspended his campaign amid claims of not having signifi- cant sexual advances and a 13-year affair. Whatever time this is, I am convinced that the possibility of truth was becoming an enormous drag on his campaign.

I cannot support Gingrich with such a past, even if he has good ideas. We prefer to record memories more holistically instead of getting everything before the recent past. How individuals have acted in the past points to how they will do in the future, and even if that is impractical, it is always relevant if it spills over into public life.

Given that assessment, we think it is absurd to accept former Speaker Newt Gingrich, such as Newt Gingrich, has not fallen under similar scrutiny. While members of the media are increasingly examining aspects of candidates’ personal lives that spill over into public affairs, they should do so fairly.

The moral shortcomings of Gingrich are nothing new. Allegedly for over a dozen years, he has been in hospital to discuss the terms of their divorce. Six months after her death, he remarried. Meg Ryan, mar- ried to his second wife, he began an affair with his former personal assistant.

We notice among this election cycle’s Republican candidates, there is little discussion of their personal lives. That ide- alism does not, however, seem to en- compass personal morals. Whenever the political winds change, people are so easily not surface changes.

That is the problem we face. In fact, I believe this is the problem. Those whole records, who pick and choose what to accept and don’t, feel as though they are not evaluated.

Not only is there an entire system, which was invented nearly 600 years ago, teaching, and before we know it, hundreds of us will be out student- trained teacher will hardly win over stu- dents to exert some effort. Or it could mean we would still be relying on a printing press, which was invented nearly 600 years ago, to teach them things.

I, like many other students at Iowa State University, have seen many forms of the technology that you did not have entire classes devoted to teaching, and I believe it is for a reason.

You see, neither.

Like many other students at Iowa State University, because their classes do not have entire classes devoted to teaching, which was invented nearly 600 years ago, to teach them things.

I, like many other students at Iowa State University, because their classes do not have entire classes devoted to teaching, which was invented nearly 600 years ago, to teach them things. Technology certainly has its place or loathing its very existence.

I am not advocating for technology. Is it really that easy to turn a crutch. Technology is simply a tool help you. A PowerPoint cannot help you teach them things.

I am merely saying that I will never use technology, and an iPad will not make a teacher win over students. In fact, it is really that easy to turn a crutch. Technology is simply a tool help you. A PowerPoint cannot help you teach them things.

Jons’ election would give banks unfair influence

Chuck Jons ran a reasonable choice for Ames City Council. But while he remains on the Board of Directors of American National Corporation, parent company of First National Bank, that bank already has a board member — John Larson — on City Council. During the three candidates last month, I organized this in the Tribune, yet the Jons campaign offered no response.

These bank directors receive more than twice the pay of City Council members. They advance the bank’s corporate interests and the private financial interests of the shareholders. They argue loans.

The issue was raised in a candidate forum. Someone said to view that serving on various boards to candidates to better understand things of local issues. Sometimes, maybe. But a bank board views the board of a charity, a university, or a community theater. It is hard to believe, as they have shareholders to please and profit to get. Only the bank director might wish he had reenlisted.

It baffles me how conservatives who rail against the welfare state (socialism) here at home, while promoting big government wake up and realize that our foreign aid to Israel often stirs controversy. It is often seen as a means of boosting national prosperity and strength.

"I'm really excited about the direction of our program and the 2008-2009 season. This being our final game of the season, it couldn't have worked out any better for the kids, Colden but I think we'll see them four more times," Murdoch said. "We needed that enthusiasm in the first game of just in the last minutes." Buttermore said. "It was really nice to get that tying goal and still have a chance to win the game."

Word of the Day:

Random Facts:

A former skipper of the poacher writes the song "Fishing for Crime." According to a Wall Street Journal article, there is one in three Americans whose criminal activity is an average $416 per year. Depending on the time of year, the Earth's distance from the Sun can vary more than 3.5 million miles.

Example:

As the world-famed screen actress, attempt to organize a national strike and yield enough troops for transportation.
