In the most recent poster sale at Iowa State, no student fees were collected, and a poster sale at Iowa State. No student fees were collected, and a poster was not sold due to its content. The poster was about the importance of avoiding stress.

Professor shares method for dealing with stress

By Emily Storm

A lecture schedule combined with procrastination leads to a stressful workload at the end of the day and little time and motivation to tackle it.

Rob Wallace, president of the Graduate and Professional Students Senate, has encouraged students to get involved and participating in art programs at the university. Last month, the Student Activities Center received a contribution of roughly $10,000 from the poster sales annually, which is put toward art programs at the Memorial Union.

Activities Center receives a contribution of roughly $10,000 from the poster sales annually, which is put toward art programs at the Memorial Union. Wallace advocates for reducing some of the most crucial parts of avoiding stress and succeeding academically.

Wallace encourages other senators in the Faculty Senate to find hobbies or participate in recreational activities to help reduce stress levels. Wallace has worked with woodturning for the past 10 to 12 years.

Faculty Senate president-elect Rob Wallace, associate professor in ecology, evolution and organismal biology, said Iowa State has plans to higher funding for Iowa State students, but what it means for the University of Iowa is uncertain. "It's a possibility for every undergraduate student," Leath said. "The University of Iowa pays for various expenses, including tuition, so the extra costs, Leath said.

Leath said part of the way the university will be able to make up for those expenses is through the performance-based funding model that awards universities more money based on the amount of in-state students who attend the school in an effort to increase in-state enrollment, Leath said.

Hy-Vee discontinues annual triathlon

By Matthew Bezak

Hy-Vee Inc. announced Tuesday it will be ending the annual Hy-Vee Triathlon for a series of events that are designed to promote wellness and health in children. The change comes as the company’s health and wellness program continues to evolve and we are constantly evaluating our offerings to ensure that they continue to engage customers of all ages, fitness levels and abilities,” Bezak said in a statement letter to athletes.

The initial Hy-Vee Triathlon took place in 2007 and the $1 million amount for finishing first in the event was the largest amount. The event, which happened on a race basis, is estimated to have provided a total of $4.5 million to nonprofits and Monies’ economy.

The letter stated the new events “will be aimed at engaging children of all fitness levels and abilities” and “will focus on participation and fund-raising instead of competition.”

Hy-Vee Inc. said it was working on additional information about the new events by the end of March.

5 tips for singles on Valentine’s Day

BY PND Special Sections

Roses are red,
Violas are blue.
If you’re single,
Valentine’s Day is for you.

Valentine’s Day is filled with flowers, candy and cheesy pick-up lines, but the day is also revered as “Singleness Awareness Day.” Being single on the most couple-oriented day of the year doesn’t have to be a drag though. Here are five tips to survive Valentine’s Day doing single.

• Shake it off with Taylor Swift or rock out with your own personal playlist.

• Channel your inner superwoman and make your hair and makeup one of the few times it won’t be hay.

• Think of all the money that you saved not having to buy a gift for someone, and you don’t have to worry about a giant teddy bear staring at you. Plus you can afford a real dinner that’s not on sale! So don’t boton’t like what you get, go on a date. Or take a friend with you and actually have a fun time with it. Avoid buying Valentine’s Day tickets and make plans well in advance.

• Spend some time at the gym or in the library. Valentine’s Day is the only day of the year that there’s no one at the gym, and at one of the few times it won’t be hay.

Two million go into art, kind of a "using both sides of the brain" type thing," Wallace said. "I do try to make it a balance between the left and the right."

Wallace worked with people in high school and in college to uncover the craft after his daughter was born. "It was a form of therapy and relaxation," he said. "I was using a brush to hold in my hand and a piece of wood as an artist can carve it." It’s a great form of woodworking. When Woodworking when you’re doing a piece of wood that you can carve it. The egg donation process is accompanied by a long list of ethical considerations. The process involves the following steps:

1. Prospective donors undergo a thorough medical evaluation to ensure they are physically and mentally fit.
2. The donor is provided with comprehensive information about the process and the risks involved.
3. The donor sign an informed consent form.
4. The donated eggs are fertilized in a fertility clinic.
5. The resulting embryos are transferred to the woman who agreed to carry the pregnancy.

The decision to donate eggs is a personal one, and donors may face various ethical dilemmas. The process involves the donation of eggs, which are not considered to be a part of the body.

The egg donation process has been a controversial issue in recent years, with many ethical concerns raised. However, despite these concerns, the process continues to be widely practiced due to its benefits.

Egg donation has been a helpful and crucial part of stem cell research, and has continued despite the concern surrounding the donation process and ethical dilemma of egg donation.

In conclusion, egg donation is a complex and controversial issue that requires careful consideration and ethical evaluation. Further research and discussion are needed to address the ethical concerns and ensure the process is conducted in an ethical and responsible manner.
