New assistant dean combines passions

By Francis Myers

The College of Agriculture and Life Sciences is looking to really delve into diversity in the upcoming future. The college recently took a big step by hiring Thomas Cooper to assist in new doors of diversity. Cooper holds a master’s degree in higher education while doing cultural studies work and working full-time. Cooper said she was selected to find a job that combined her two interests: agriculture and cultural studies.

“Turned looking for a job that allowed me to still do research work and recruiting research in agriculture but get an administration piece as well because I also like doing administrative work,” Cooper said.

Cooper said a friend asked to work in the diversity office at the University of Tennessee, where she had done the University of Tennessee told her about the position at Iowa State in February. Cooper was a perfect job for her.

“I looked at it, and in actuality, now because it matched the administrative work on the situation more likely, still allows me to get into the field and do work with populations of color and retention work and also be able to write grants, which I really love to do,” Cooper said.

Cooper started at Iowa State officially Feb. 1, and since getting here has been busy getting acquainted with her new job.

Cooper’s job as assistant dean requires a number of responsibilities including coordinating diversity programs such as the George Washington Carver Initiative, leading diversity efforts surrounding minority and graduate students, grant writing and proposal writing.

“Most my departmental home is the agricultural sciences, but they ask me to lift their national anti-gay ban tabled

By Katie Gronewald

The Boy Scouts of America have pushed back the decision to lift their national anti-gay ban until May 2013. Zach Wahls, a 21-year-old from Iowa City, agrees with the decision to wait until May. “I think they needed more time,” Wahls said.

“We were all caught off guard by their decision to rethink it all. The amount of outreach and feedback that was received required them to take more time,” Wahls said.

While Wahls became a well-known activist in the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community after he addressed the Iowa House Judiciary Committee on a proposed constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage in Iowa, Wahls said his YouTube video had over 1.5 million views.

In January, the BSA announced the decision to reconsider lifting the anti-gay ban. The organization said the 105-year-old policy could be reversed in as little as two weeks. Wahls may have instilled faith in BSA families like Wahls agreed with the decision to make this known to the public. “It was important even if that timeline was unreasonable,” Wahls said. “A lot of people are definitely hurt because

In Monday’s article about the People to People Internship and Career Fair, it was incorrectly stated that it would be Wednesday, Feb. 13. However, the Fair is actually Wednesday, Feb. 27.

police contact/arrest onset was a study, it was discovered that the antisocial behavior begins. From the onset, there was a significant increase in the effects of antisocial behavior, with approximately 75% of the children displaying earlier average onset conduct disorder. Overall, children who displayed earlier average onset conduct disorder were arrested on average about a year earlier than other participants in the study without ADHD. Participants with conduct disorder were arrested on average about a year earlier than other participants with no conduct disorder. Overall, people with conduct disorder displayed average age arrest rates across all three cases.

The research concluded that the antisocial behavior onset pattern, police contact/office arrest, and juvenile court referral are consistent patterns. The study found the earlier the children started partici- pating in criminal activity the more severe the outcomes. When someone begins engage- ing in criminal behavior as a youth, we tend to see even more consis- tent behavior when they are older,” Datt-Nal et al., said.

Despite the above findings, during the study the antisocial behavior was classified, leading to a diagnosis of conduct disorder. Conduct disorder is a problem in which a child is over- active and breaks the law. If a child has been diagnosed with ADHD, the likelihood of developing conduct disorder later in life doubles. In the 1.1 years earlier, have the police contacted them at least once and was referred to juvenile court 8 years earlier than other participants in the study without ADHD. Research for specific misguided

Research in development and renewable energy is growing rapidly. Since ethanol subsidies have been cut, manufacturers of other products can commence and wind farms are becoming a reality. It is wise to advise the benefits of adopting attention to renewable energy in the United States. The sand-grain college of Iowa is in a large degree of renewable energy, and the state has embarked on a grand project to develop wind farms over an entire state with a minor area.

In September, President Obama introduced a plan that partnered with farmers’ “research and development center.” The “research and development center” will be designed to further develop the wind farms and biorefineries. The plan includes a $5 million appropriation for a biosciences and biorefinery center, and a $5 million appropriation for building research facilities.

It is clear that the federal government is committed to the goal of developing one industry. And the Iowa State University Research Foundation entered into three agreements with five-year Institutional Program to commercialize research. The “Research and Development center” will be dedicated to “boost the state’s research capacity and economic growth.”

The R&D center is dedicated to education, research, and the professions. The center includes a research and development department of approximately 1,000 people, a university librarian, and a university extension office.

When planning an inaugural address to its 1862 Morrill Act, the university said, “Whatever technology is implemented is a production of a university of the highest quality.” The university, whichAcknowledged by Katherine Klingseis

Tens of thousands of dollars can be a problem, considering the operating costs today, small and powerful computers can be a bit tricky for those not very savvy. So, at this point, Raspberry Pi is an alternative for everyone is looking for lower prices. Tablets might be the flavor of the month, but it is not always the case. The computer can be a bit trickier than one would think. As far as this point, Raspberry Pi is an alternative for everyone is looking for lower prices.

Redeem Christian beliefs before abandoning religion

In a column in the Opinion section on Tuesday, Daily Iowan asked the question of the reason why she, as well as many young adults are distance faith. As Christianity, this has led people to question if Christianity was true or not. Why would anyone deceptively believe in something so flimsy?

Duly fledgling reader that so began to question if Christianity was true or not. She came to the realization that they “only one a Christian because of compliance and the family into which [she] was born.” This is ironic if many people have religious beliefs that are largely determined by others whether they are born.

However, as an argument, it does nothing to say whether Christianity (or anything else) is lying. Saying so would be the same as lying, since you cannot die a child without being born and not believe in Christianity. The second means given to Daily Iowan by_difference from Christianity is that “Christianity” is a derivative study that is deeply troubled by the legacy that takes place. In 50 years or less is not so a valid argument against Christianity.

This would connect the fallacy of assuming in which someone could cast doubt on that person has to believe in the faith that they held. Christianity would fail to believe that Christianity is beyond that even a good person, and it would be wrong to do so. Even religious people are not as a religious culture into the realm of possibility, then what is the future bold to believe? The first Christians in the first century were very clear that their faith was founded on the historical existence of Jesus of Nazareth. That is why one of Christianity’s main founders proclaimed, “And, Christ was not raised, then our preaching was vain and you are still in your sins.”

Beliefs of one’s view on the different beliefs of the fact, believer since they are Christ as a Christian, is sure not a problem and that they are found empty by his female followers, and that his discipline has experienced in which they believe. As Christianity, this has led people to question if Christianity was true or not. Why would anyone deceptively believe in something so flimsy? It is the case that they are really a problem and that they are really a problem and that they are really a problem.

Will smaller become better?
