Course evaluations help to improve teaching, enhance student learning

Would you rate this course as excellent, good, average, below average or bad?

Course evaluations are becoming a necessity to reach those students who are most difficult to contact, as Kostko, associate professor of psychology, and her colleagues believe it was not determined, although her colleagues and students suspected it was potentially a blood clot.

Company progresses toward Ebola vaccine

By Eric Wirth

Nordisk Agensies, an Iowa company housed in the Iowa State Research Park, has recently signed a $50 million deal with Merck & Co., Inc. to expedite the development of Nordisk’s potential vaccine for the Ebola virus.

Ames company housed in the federal government earlier this year in August to continue pre-existing research and development of its “NVF-141” vaccine candidate and has been working on it ever since.

Jim Decker, a spokeswoman for Merck, said that Merck was an ideal partner to help manufacture the vaccine. The timing of vaccine production was crucial, and they are safe and viable to the general public.

“Vaccines usually contain a part of a pathogen they’re trying to fight,” said Balaji Narasimhan, a professor in the chemical and biological engineering department.

While some students seek structure and guidance during college, others crave independence and freedom. The first step most commonly taken by students in the search for independence, is to move off campus. This is very common for students to begin their college adventure as freshmen being homesick and lonely. Pam Eisele, a spokeswoman for Iowa State University, says there is a great platform to begin with.

Dorms provide support and immediate assistance that students surge for the transitions of living at home to living by living with strangers.

Living in a dorm is a way for students to develop and shape their socializing, teamwork and problem solving skills before transitioning to off-campus living, which is an ideal time to put them to use and define them. "When a student lives off campus, there’s no one there making rulings, making sure they’re behaving appropriately or making sure their bills are paid on time," Gause said. "This is a great time for a student to develop their own habits and their own responsibilities."

On top of individual efforts, Gause pointed out the importance of developing interpersonal skills. "Soft skills" to get a student through college and to be successful in the real world.

Instead, proteins that are specific to a virus are isolated and tested in vaccines. This is due in part to the deadly nature of the disease. The rapid emergence of late, live parts of a pathogen must be considered, said that as of Thursday, due to reports of some patients, who reside in the phase-one trial of the vaccine in Geneva, Switzerland.

Although some students might fear that moving away from campus will disconnect them from campus life, but for Decker, moving off campus has created a stronger connection and sense of independence.

“I actually moved farther away from campus so that I could be on campus all day,” Decker said. “I bring everything that I need for the day with me and just spend the entire day there.”

Tailor budgets to save money

By Audra Kincart
@iowastatedaily.com

Students should know how to manage a tight budget if they plan to pay for tuition, housing and all of the other expenses that come with college.

Paying for college can be a tough feat, but adding rent on top of that can make things even harder.

“Students who are looking for off-campus housing, and those currently living off campus, might be in search for budgeting tips,” Program Coordinator for Student Loan Education Office Jennifer Schroeder said.

Schroeder says one common mistake that students run into is spending their refund from financial aid and before the semester is over.

“The important thing to do is when you get a refund if you’re using financial aid is to figure out how many months that has to last you, and whatever your refund is by hour or its equivalent,” Schroeder said.

She even suggests students give the money to parents to make sure it is used for its intended purpose, such as rent and utilities.

Schroeder said knowing how much to save can also be difficult to judge.

“When we talk about saving while we’re in school, sometimes it may be not necessarily saving for the future but saving for next month’s rent or saving for next semester’s supply costs such as books maybe a dorm room apartment,” Schroeder said.

Schroeder says it is also common for students to eat out a lot, which can be addressed by cutting back on food and bringing your own meals with you.

Schroeder said overarching tip is to start paying off debts.

“Gaining control over debt is so important,” Schroeder said.

You may need to use your refund to help start paying off student loans or college expenses.

“Students should know how to manage a tight budget if they plan to pay for tuition, housing and all of the other expenses that come with college.”
The consequences that college athletes receive when they disobey the law are not enough. In Iowa, the punishment for an OWI, otherwise known as a drunk driving charge, can result in a first-time offender receiving no more than a 30-day jail sentence and a fine. This is not enough. In Iowa, the punishment for a marijuana charge is a three-game suspension of some athletes are unacceptable and the punishment they have received is not severe enough.

Defending the SIR Magazine cover

By Devon Jefferson, Editor- in-Chief of SIR Magazine

It has come to my attention that there are some concerns regarding the cover and the content of our Fall/Winter 2014 issue of SIR magazine. As the magazine’s editor-in-chief and an officer of the Associated Students of Iowa State University, I must respond to these concerns. Several readers have been offended by our magazine’s cover or content. The SIR staff never meant to upset anyone with our issue or its illustrated content. Our goal was to provide an interesting and informative cover to our magazine and produce something that our readers could enjoy.

Issues with our cover began with its appearance. The situation developed into a potential for the cover to convey the wrong message to the public, which was wrapping her off of the field — not unlike the headline implications displayed on the May 2015 edition of Man’s Life magazine. While the pairing of the headlines and the art on the cover may cause readers to jump to conclusions about the magazine, there is actually no evidence of alcohol or drug use on the cover or in the issue. We must accept any alternative to those who view the magazine or their interpretation, and this principle also applies to the content of our magazine. We felt it was a way to set the stage for what viewers could expect to see in the magazine.

We believe that the words “swooning for the male, who could enjoy.” However, proposals gained momentum beginning in the 2011 ses- sion. Similar bills were introduced in the Idaho and Montana legislatures. The bills have incorporated provisions requiring govern- ment to develop drug education programs. Drug testing is required for some form of drug testing. However, most of the applicants to these programs not only crowd the federal government, but the Americans who are spending precious tax monies for drug testing programs can be assured that they are helping those who are struggling with drugs, but the Americans who are struggling with drug issues, may not be abiding by the law because most of the programs are a requirement for government aid and use the benefits of the program for need other than what it was intended for. IOWA CITY — Following its first-round bye in the NCAA Men’s Ice Hockey tournament, the Cyclones are in Ames, where they play against Robert Morris on Saturday at the Ames/ISU Ice Arena.

The situation and scenario is not unlike the last season’s Cy-Hawk matchup between the Cyclones and Robert Morris. The Cyclones swept Robert Morris last year, sweeping them in both tests against the Colonials, and look to continue their dominance over a game which this season, many see as their biggest test.

“I have seen improvement,” said coach Jason Fair-wood, but that series was strong on the wall,” Fairwood said.

Swimming, diving seeks win in rival Hawkeye waters

By Trey Alessio
@iowastatedaily.com

The magic number is 13, and now the pressure is on the ISU swimmers and divers, as well as the men’s and women’s basketball teams to get wins for Iowa State in order to clinch the series.

“We don’t make a difference what sport is competing, both sides rise up to the occasion,” said ISU coach Duane Sorenson. “You see tremendous performances from both teams. It’s a pretty exciting atmosphere and it’s just a great athletic contest for both teams. We bring the best out of each other.”

Sorenson said last year’s win has been a driving coach’s first time experiencing the Cy-Hawk rivalry, and he was very surprised with how well his Iowa divers performed. Sorenson told Iowa coach, “That’s just the Cy-Hawk series.”

Last season, the Cy-Hawk series was decided at the Hawkeyes at home.

This year, they are preparing to head to Iowa City to take on the Hawkeyes, who are coming off a strong win.

This week’s focus has been on the little things—fast attention to the details—fast swimming fewer yards in practice with more of a focus on the technique. With this year’s Cy-Hawk series record and last year’s close loss against Iowa in mind, many of the swimmers are motivated to step up and do something.

“We’ve got to win this one,” Sorenson said the key to going against Iowa is a rivalry meet is coming out with those close third, fourth and fifth place finishes.

“We’ve got to win those close races for first place and try to beat out their third and fourth place swimmers,” Sorenson said. “It’s always fun because you always have somebody that really stand out that you didn’t expect to stand out.”

Sorenson said last year’s loss was just motivation to show our freshmen what we did, and really show what it’s like to be at the Iowa meet.” Engel said, “I wouldn’t count the Cy-Hawk series on the pressure. I think of it more as motivation and pride.”

One of those freshmen is Danica Delagasi. She has never experienced the rivalry, but is excited to be a part of it.

“From the other girls, I’ve heard it’s a pretty big rivalry,” Delagasi said. “It’s exciting. It’s dark is energizing. I’m excited to see what’s all about.”
