New bar brings big city to campus

With bright graffiti on the walls, two light fixtures and a list of DJs every night it opens, Club Blow is a lot like many Austin bars. But the bar’s location is a little more of a step up for the campus.

Opened Club Blow is located in the formal location of Cityscape on Nov. 5, along with its business partner, Matt Smith, who previously lived in New York. Dika and Smith formerly ran a club in Austin, Texas.

The former Cityscape was 64 patrons, easily beating out record previous record holder Oklahoma State, which scored 119 points in New Mexico. CLC on Friday.

“I thought they handled the pressure well,” said coach Cortney Bonds. “Our front line looked ready, really good.”

The women’s record is still three in the top 10 nationally. Junior Benji Smith and Sara Kinderknecht, Give Some Warmth coordinator and junior in apparel, merchandising and design, said it’s an opportunity to give back to them, “I feel like it’s a little more of a step up for the campus,” Dika said.

The Memorial Union is currently in the process of making improvements and planning for future ones. Along with working on the station in the fountain and installing a new water fountain, the work also includes a plan to re-route the current fountain and bring the adobe right up to the deck — enabling handicap accessibility and a more accessible route.

Part of this project is being funded by the Government of the Student Body. GSB will be contributing anywhere from $50,000 to $100,000 to this project. GSB members see this as a way of improving one of the focal points of every ISU student’s life.

I think that the Memorial Union is one of the most utilized and revered buildings on campus and in many the first impression of Iowa State,” said Arms, director, Inter-Residence Hall Association senator and sophomore in animal sciences. “The improvements to the Memorial Union will make the Memorial Union, and the campus, more student and family-friendly and continue to make a positive step forward to making our Memorial Union one of the best. One of the main points brought up during the meeting was that the MU is a student organization funded. First, as an advisor to GSB and associate director of the MU, and the facility to be a component to many different student organizations and that in turn benefits all students.”

The Union student organization continues to use our facilities for their meetings and events, as improvements to the building only help these student groups,” Hill said.

During the GSB meetings participants talked about these improvements. One idea by GSB members that if they were to finalize this project for $40,000 — almost the amount of money in their eyes — there should be a place for community groups and people who helped fund the improvements. With funding approved by GSB, the improvements for the fountain should be finished soon, making it ready and working for the spring. The camp addition project will not begin until summer and will be ready by the beginning of the next school year.

“Although we are in a more individualistic society, if you’re a group of young boys that have that kind of what the program wants them to do and they care about each other, they think of the above line.”

Both Nelson and Stack have consistently been within the top three scores for the Cyclones, which may help push their team’s efforts at the eventual Olympic Trials. Nelson said that he’s feeling good at the moment and just it and it’s a chance to do something good at the end but just didn’t execute it.”

Taking first in the men’s division was Colorado State with 42 points. Pacesetter Ross Lay was hopeful for an individual bid to the Olympics, but placed 18th with a time of 31:41.50 on the 10,000-meter course. After competing in both cross-country and track and field events in recent years at natural, Lay smiled and said that it was a great year for his team. “It’s kind of a difficult year, but it was really wanted to do better, but it was looking forward to track season.”

The audience in the Great Hall white performances of stage took place in traditional dance and costumes. The African Students Association performed a dance, followed by an African performance. Debates are more than talking points

We’d want to say whether we think the President’s campaign for president is over or recovered until he demonstrates consistent, by his ability with voters and pundits alike and until he shows progress in persuading the undecided issues beyond its existence as talking points. He may have performed well Saturday night. However, in other debates are less than inspiring. To the candidates who are not the strict scrutiny before they make a decision about whom to support. Now the 2012 presidential election, television appearance has played a major role in determining how candidates are viewed. Appearance — from hairstyles to power ties to cowboy boots — are critical stages during debates is also important.

The fact that he having that ability is necessary, however, does not mean that politicians should be common. We could hardly elect a robot, even if he’s clever because they are uncommon and have abilities the rest of us may not have.
