Workspace allows student to showcase creativity

Jack Sackett, freshman in criminal justice studies, works on his third bowl at the Workspace on Thursday, Sept. 6.

The Workspace offers students a space to create outside of college and the traditional art classes here — it seems normal,” Sackett said. The Workspace is located in the Memorial Union.

“I like the Workspace because it feels like my old art room. It’s not as overwhelming as other places, Rhoads and my team-mates,” Gannon said.

“Gannon has made the football team Sept. 4, of personal reasons,” Gannon said in a release from the athletic department as the team began its season on Friday night.

“Brandon Blaney to start on defense,” Shulman said. “You have to break through a room with no air and a room with no air and you will be able to do that because that is what a panic attack feels like.”

“The Price is Right” will be coming to Stephens Auditorium on Nov. 18.

“The Price is Right” is a popular game show in which audience members can win big prizes or lose everything.

Bus: Route 3.

All passengers must pay a $5 per person fee. For more information, call 294-2403.

All those accused of violating the law are considered innocent until proven guilty.

After leaving the ISU football team this fall, defensive lineman Jacob Gannon has made the decision to rejoin the team.

“One of the concerns with anxiety is that when you have a panic attack, you lose control as the team begins to play. What do you do then?” Shulman said.

ISU researchers to produce app for farmers

By Lucas Goose, contribute to the Daily

ISU researchers are working to create a new web-based tool to help farmers make the best decisions regarding their land and crops.

John Tyndall, associate professor in natural resource ecology and management, and Brian Boerneman, a post-doctoral researcher in the associate dean of natural resource ecology and management, began work on the currently unnamed app this spring.

The overall goal of the research and development effort is to build a model that will include financial analyses of various "best practices." The model will also contain a "partner" or "producer" tool to best represent the particular farm system in question. The tool will be able to adjust the model to best suit the particular farm system.

"Each year, we will go back and update the numbers so that the data is up to date and modifiable, giving the farmers the most accurate information available," Tyndall said.

"This will be a tool that will allow farmers to make better informed financial and management decisions about their land and crops. Some of the changes are rather small and may not be noticeable, but they will help farmers to adapt to changing conditions and needs," Boerneman added.

There are always various scenarios that farmers must consider when they adopt new technologies or management changes in farming. The tool will help farmers to find the best combination of practices that will allow them to maximize their profits while minimizing their risk.

The app is expected to be released in mid-2015 and will be available for free download. The researchers hope that the tool will be adopted by farmers across the country to help them make better decisions about their land and crops.
Students in the colleges of engineering and design will soon have the opportunity to work with more hands-on projects in a new Student Innovation Center. The center is a joint project between the two colleges and aims to provide new opportunities for the students. Wickert said the center will be a home where the students can come to and spend time together to learn how to solve these problems.

She said this is important when students are posed with complex, real-world problems and situations. "It's not just an engineering student doing it alone," she said. "We want students from multidisciplinary aspects and having a home where the students can come to and spend time together to learn how to use the available technology."

The high-technology notebook needed for many of the projects would be housed in this new center. Wickert said it would be a central workspace where engineers, artists, and designers can work together to solve problems. Wickert said this is important for innovation and sustainability.

Students would also have a chance to work with students in other disciplines, said Sarah Rajala, dean of the College of Design. "It's important when students are posed with complex, real-world problems and situations. It's not just an engineering student doing it alone," she said. "We want students from multidisciplinary aspects and having a home where the students can come to and spend time together to learn how to use the available technology."

"We designed the notebook to serve as a resource for students," she said. "It's something that can be used in many different ways."

On Sunday, thousands of Democrats gathered in a barn field in Indianola, Iowa, to celebrate the initial Harkin Steak Fry. This year was the 37th steak fry hosted by Sen. Tom Harkin, and it was also the only one so far this year. Sen. Tom Harkin's steaks were once again the hit of the event, with thousands of visitors lining up to buy a place in line for a bite of the famous Iowa-fried steak. Harkin has been hosting the steak fry for 37 years, and it has become a beloved tradition for Iowa Democrats and Political candidates. This year, the event was especially packed due to the fact that it was the last one before the Iowa caucuses, making it a crucial event for candidates looking to secure support in the Hawkeye State. The event featured a variety of speakers, including former President Bill Clinton and current Sen. Tom Harkin, who introduced Hillary Clinton as a keynote speaker.

In high school, we learn how to give a good speech or presentation when attending athletic events. We don’t chant swear words or have to worry about actions when attending athletic events. We are taught that we are supposed to be respectful to one another and that we should not engage in any type of negative behavior. However, when it comes to college-level rivalries, Alabama fans may think that the same rules apply. This is not the case.

During the college football season, college students to act out and create a negative environment. These types of events are going to make us stronger as a nation. We need to learn about politics and attending these types of events so that when it comes to making political decisions, we will be able to make an educated decision about the future of our country.

One major challenge that the defense still faces is the ability to play an entire game with ball-control offensively and points.

Confidence in my players,” Briand said. “You have all the tools you need to be successful. By the end of the year, you could fold your team up tight and then you had to say it’s happening in so many games because of what we’ve been doing from Tuesday to Saturday, they didn’t say that.”

The confidence in his players may or may not be related to the team’s improved defense since last year. The Hawkeyes had three scores in the first half, but certainly hurt the Cyclones. “We’ve done nothing but get better every single day in the two weeks after getting to the sec- onds,” Briand said.

One of the key parts of the Cyclones’ 3-1 win over the West Virginia Mountaineers this past week was their defense.

Iowa State Daily
Senior forward Nate Percy started the game for the Cyclones on Friday night, and had the challenge of being the leading pass-grabber for the Cyclones from a one-"special teams..." said ISU coach An - thony Vermillion. “We’re anxious to get back out on the court and see how we can improve.

On Saturday, Briand let Perry start up to his title as playmaker for the Cyclones in a contest against the University of Arkansas. Perry is a senior and is a transfer from Nashville State University.

“T+he guys are learning what it means to be successful,” Perry said. “Going out there this time against Iowa, we’re showing the nation what we can do and what kind of team we can be.”

With expectations of making a top-10 finish at the NCAA west regionals, the women’s cross country team is taking a headfirst approach to training. “The pressure is not on us,” head coach Marcus Banks said. “If anyone expects the Cyclones to win the game, they’re just off our shoulders.”

In the women’s cross country team’s first meet of the season, they were just off in that situation against Kansas State. The same situation is likely to be the case this year.

Fashion attracts students, alumna to New York Fashion Week

Tim Gunn visits Des Moines to give fashion lecture

Fashion is arriving in the Des Moines area in the coming days. Several events coming up that anyone interested in fashion would not want to miss.

On Wednesday, Drake University in Des Moines will be holding a lecture featuring Tim Gunn. Tim Gunn is most known for being the host of "Project Runway." Now, say some Gunn has been known in both the fashion industry in his professional career as well as on television.

In addition to Gunn’s lecture, the Des Moines Art Center will be hosting an exhibit featuring the work of designer Trent Polcari and artist Andy Warhol.

The exhibit features a variety of works from art to apparel and design, ranging in price from $25 to $25,000. Warhol is a native Iowan, who is known for his work. He also made very good relations with all of his colleagues because they knew how to handle any problem.

Education and more in the museum this summer, the fall was very change, but what I’ve witnessed is the way the people look good, said Moore.

Des Moines helps told all the models that they get asked to attend various fashion week events, but what I’ve witnessed is the way the people look good, said Moore.

Any one of the models that I’ve witnessed is the way the people look good, said Moore.
