Starting today, all ISU students are required to complete online training on violence prevention due to a federal Title IX mandate that prohibits sexual discrimination.

"We're putting special emphasis on making ISU safe, welcoming and inclusive," said President Steven Leath.

"As a victim of sexual assault myself, I strongly believe that ISU should do everything possible to prevent and combat sexual assault," he said.

The Title IX training will include an instructional video, followed by a quiz that students will need to complete by Friday, Feb. 28.

The training will cover topics such as sexual discrimination, harassment, assault, violence and consent.

"If students do not complete the training into as many sessions as they need, the training will need to be completed by all students," Hill said.

Students can compare the Title IX training to the alcohol and sexual conduct education training that will begin before completing the Title IX training.

"This is all going to be shuffled into one," Hill said.

"If students neglect to complete the training, they will not slip through the cracks; there will be some sort of follow-up to make sure the training is complete.

"We really hope that something this important that students will not be one to decide not to do it," Hill said.

President Barack Obama will deliver his final State of the Union tonight as a divided Congress looks to wrap a term filled with partisan gridlock. It is likely to be a year in which the president and Congress will still play a major role this year, and the Republican Party will still be engaged in the politics and pomp of government shutdown and the resounding condemnation from the executive office.

The president will double down, using his State of the Union address to give me millions of dollars, I would be sure to hear much of the same points as we did last year. Change and the shift to renewable fuels, for example, remains a relatively untouched issue. The president will continue to push for energy efficiency and renewable energy sources.

While the two parties will likely have different visions for the nation’s future, there is one area where they may agree: the need to address the federal government’s debt and deficit. The government will continue to struggle with balancing the budget, and policymakers will need to find ways to reduce spending and increase revenue.

The president will likely use his speech to highlight the success of his administration’s efforts to address climate change, including the Paris Agreement and the Clean Power Plan. He may also discuss the administration’s efforts to improve access to healthcare and to combat the opioid crisis.

The president may also address the ongoing debate over immigration reform, including the potential for a bipartisan deal to provide a pathway to citizenship for many undocumented immigrants.

In addition to these policy issues, the president may also use his speech to call on the country to come together and work across the aisle to address the challenges facing the nation. He may urge Americans to put aside their differences and work together to find solutions to the problems facing our country.

In conclusion, the president’s final State of the Union address will be a moment of reflection on his presidency and a call to action for the country to come together and work for a better future. It will be an opportunity for the president to reflect on his accomplishments and to outline a vision for the country’s future.

No. 16 Iowa State will attempt to pull off what it couldn’t do Saturday. The Cyclones are 0-2 in Big 12 play. The Jayhawks are 1-0 in Big 12 play.

Iowa State heads to Lubbock, Texas, this week to take on CSCHL rival St. Louis this weekend. Liu says Iowa State will have the “in the grand scheme of things” aspect of the win.

“Iowa State has a good, I’m in more of a bad mood, doesn’t often lose at home, especially in recent memory, and one of the strongest home court advantages the Big 12 has.”

But what we talked about before the game was one of those losses, winning by two points in 2000 (64-62), 2001 (79-77) and 2005 (90-89) and last season (97-89) also means a thriller. Niang mentioned a 2-pointer with 1.3 seconds remaining in regulation.

“We put ourselves in a position to win last year, and that’s not something that’s easy to do,” Niang said. “Obviously we didn’t think it all.”

“This season the Cyclones will have two freshmen playing at Kansas for the first time. Koch knows what that’s like.”

How do you keep spirits up in the game against Texas Tech. Lloyd was counting on Moody to keep spirits up in the game against Texas Tech.

Lloyd scored Iowa State’s first goal to lift the Cyclones back in the game at that point, and four minutes later, with a spring in his step that resulted in the Cyclones getting a point in Sunday’s match, clinching a 2-1 win over the Hawkeyes and securing the series sweep of the season’s opener. The win helped put Cyclone goalie Trevor Lloyd in the line-up, with new teammates Evan Brey, Brey on Saturday and make the trip to Texas Tech.

“We have at the end of the game that we needed to win,” Moody said. “Regardless of how we did, we just needed to win and that was all that was in my head the whole time.”

Paris Fashion Week wrapped up Friday and now the fashion world is abuzz with Spring collections inspired by these high-end garments.

The shows, held Jan. 19 to Feb. 24, featured haute couture collections by designers including Christian Dior, Jean Paul Gaultier and Valentino.

Haute couture is a form of art with emphasis on wearability, elegance and verisimilitude. Couture garments, including the items shown.

Christian Dior presented his Spring-Summer 2014 Haute Couture collection Jan. 20 where models were transformed into elegant icons dressed in runway show. One look consisted of a black top and pants with a brown, floral blouse.

This look can be transformed from runway to reality by taking Dior’s concept off all black and adding a printed blouse, shoes, or accessories.

Blake Swayman, sophomore in elementary education, brought high fashion to real life with her interpretation of Dior’s collection. During a black shift top with a black blazer and skirt, Swayman introduced with a long-skirted floral button-down.

From Jean Paul Gaultier’s couture collection, black structured tops with form-fitting buttons can be incorporated into day-to-day fashion by pairing a structured blazer with a pencil skirt. Vukanic combined garment of different textures for his Spring-Summer 2014 collection. His look could be transformed from runway to reality by pairing a black blazer with a patterned chiffon top.
