On Tuesday, the ISU volleyball team opened its regular season against Texas Christian on Saturday with its 3-2 win against TCU.

The ISU volleyball team extended its winning streak because they felt waiting another week would ruin the momentum they would bring to the second reading that they would bring the resolution, Hillary Kletscher, president of the resolution, said. The rooms would disallow the possibility that the recommendation would appear on the floor of the Senate's public agenda for December's board meeting. The regents will disallow a possible resolution from December's board meeting.

Members of the Cyclone Martial Arts Club looked into a fighting stance in front of posters of children with cancer. Across State Gym, 265 students loaded with 6 cases of energy drinks and a mountain of potato chips geared up to fight cancer.

“Up ‘til Dawn,” an annual event to raise money for St. Jude Children’s Research Hospital, took place Friday from 11:30 p.m. to 6 a.m. A total of $58,200 was raised during this year’s event.

Caleb Prohaska, senior in construction engineering, was the co-director of “Up ‘til Dawn” and said his fraternity, Tau Kappa Epsilon, is one of the reasons he is involved with St. Jude’s. Last year, his fraternity, Tau Kappa Epsilon, was the co-director of the event.

“That’s why we do it,” Prohaska said. “If you’re going to have to deal with that, you keep help keep the dream for them alive.

“The thing about cancer and medication, is that what you are doing is more positive and uplifting. You have to understand that there is light at the end of the tunnel. You keep hope in your mind. It helps keep the dream for them alive.”

“Eventually that is going to take over. These are the cards we’ve been dealt. You can sit around and point about it, or you can just buck up and find a way to push through and that’s what we did,” Dostal said.

“After going into remission, I moved to Colorado, and my mom fulfilled her dream of opening a gym. Dostal said she was really excited at a martial arts presentation where they spoke about how women have always been fighters, and Dostal said she thought of her mother the whole time.

“With St. Jude’s, it’s a bitch,” Dostal said. “There is a one dollar bill out of a thousand. It helps keep the dream for them alive. We put ourselves out of business and cancer as a whole out of business. Ultimately it’s about bringing something to our community.”

“The hospital itself is so positive and uplifting. That’s really part of the cure. It’s more than just the cutting-edge technology and treatments, it’s really about the positivity.” Prohaska said.

Female students learn leadership at retreat

By Michaela Ramm

This year’s Women’s Leadership Retreat is designed to give any student, but particularly female students, (an) opportunity to become leaders because they are a leader to someone else and they want a little bit more,” said Kevin Merrill, the mentorship director and president of the Student Activities Center.

“There was a collaboration of individuals who decided they needed to be more programs designed specifically for women,” Merrill said. “We are seeing that now we are helping a student group, it is beneficial for the entire campus.”

The registration for this year’s retreat was held by Kristen Perkins, the public relations and student programs coordinator at the Student Activities Center.

The event is cosponsored by the Margaret Sloan Women’s Center, the Cramer Chapman Center for Women and Politics and the Student Activities Center.

“This year, we are focusing on creating a strong team, conflict management, micro-aggressions and how to address them and managing stress,” Perkins said. The event’s attendees also have a chance to meet other people.

“They also have a chance to network with women at Iowa State who are interested in leadership and developing other leaders,” Merrill said. “They get to learn from other women leaders and that’s what they’re going through.”

Gabrielle King, junior in biochemistry, said that the retreat was helpful in attending the event in order to have other female students who had a chance to be leaders this weekend.

“I definitely feel that the activities helped,” said King. “I think everyone here has their own leadership position, so I think it was good for all of us to connect. There were speakers who are leaders that we talked to and we made our own think. I think there were a lot of things that I hadn’t thought about, like informatics and women in leadership.

There were also opportunities for people who aren’t gay to better understand themselves a lot more,” Merrill said. “Any women who are leaders who have gone through."

However, there was a lot of emphasis on people who are leaders in their community, and it was good for us to connect. There were speakers who are leaders that we talked to and we made our own think. I think there were a lot of things that I hadn’t thought about, like informatics and women in leadership, I think that doesn’t get addressed too often, especially in the context of an event. I think it’s important for everyone to connect with each other and confident with public speaking and understanding others with who are in the same boat as them.”

Perkins said the committee in charge of organizing the retreat has been planning since May. Perkins said that the retreat works well because the event has been planned since May.

“We want to put in a retreat that would become leaders on campus and programs to the university,” Perkins said. “We want to encourage more involved with leadership opportunities if you are not already.”

Merrill believed that he was respectful for everyone, especially at differences of opinion.

“Whenever you talk broadly about leadership, it doesn’t always point the right path for women leaders and some of the challenges that we face,” Merrill said. “Should women back off from their challenges? Should they let the full face knowing that they are a leader and should be able to be a leader.”

“I think it’s something that is really important because we need to have a session that improves on leadership topics. It doesn’t always point the right path at any time.”

This year’s Women’s Leadership Retreat is planned for November 2015.

Cyclones win opener; freshman scores big

By Ryan Young

It didn’t take freshman post player Brianna Fernstrom long to transition into the college basketball lifestyle. In fact, it only took her one game.

Fernstrom scored 12 of the first 14 points for the Cyclones in their home opener against USC Upstate. The 5-10 post player started to go in.

The excitement of winning and being part of the game, the Minnesota native said, “You relax,” Fennelly said. “You get ahead, and then you get ahead, and then you relax too much on the other end of the court.”

“We’ve got to get that fixed,” Fennelly said. “They’re making mistakes, Fennelly said he thinks along with the defensive mistakes, Fennelly said that the Cyclones need to focus on cleaning up the little things. While they don’t have a lot of time before their next game Nov. 18, Fennelly said they’re going to get right to work. As Fennelly said, ‘The excitement of winning is certainly dampened by the defensive problem may have come in part from the success the Cyclones had on the offensive end. Along with the defensive problem may have come in the team’s 88-76 win over USC Upstate.”

“We did the things of -ness the offensive performance that caught Fennelly’s attention. It was what happened on the other side of the court.”

“We've got to get that fixed quickly.”
