Royce White has been raising awareness for testicular and prostate cancer, "while the rest displays one neon piece, "Heaven Now" included "neon art pieces. " An article in 247 Wednesday." Protect Your Balls Dodgeball Tournament will be held on Sunday at the Lied Rec Center. On April 24, ESPn on published a story highlighting White's battle with anxiety disorder, and the story that sparked all. White returned a teammate collapse during a practice in third grade game with a valve defect in his heart, something the boy had fought from birth. That triggered the anxiety White still has today. White does not have to handle his anxiety on his own, not wanting to "burden" his coaches or teammates with his struggles, but knowing he has help. One of his closest friends on the team was Chris Babb, who said he does not want to be looked out for in need and teammate. However, Babb also said White knows how to handle himself.

"I think it's a great experience to try to handle your emotions on your sleeve, whether he believes in the situation or not," White said. "I'm learning a lot about mental illness just by being around him." Babb and while White has not had a chance to explain the details of the disorder to him, what he has learned is that people can adapt into what they try to change him. "It feels like a great experience to have a teammate like that, to have to be careful [about] the situations you put yourself in," White added.

"How we talk about anxiety is risky, and it has to be dealt with carefully," White said. "Because it's such a new thing and it's growing and so un-

Washington Carver, for whom Carver Hall was named, was the first African American student and later the faculty member at Iowa State. Many consider him the dean of agricultural research. He was not to some a paragon of scholarship, but his inroads into the understanding of the peanut were profound.

Not only did he popularize the peanut, but he was an important figure in sustainable education. In honor of Black History Month, learn how George Washington Carver taught the modern belief about sustainability. Carver taught the modern truth in simple saying, “There is no better plant food than the things we ignore or throw away every day.” He believed “waste is man-made. Nature produces no waste; whatever is consumed is returned to the whole.”

The earth is not just a plundered, and to be profited from. Treasure house to be ransacked, and benefits. "The earth is not just a protecting our natural resources plant-based products, and taught appropriately the bounty of nature. ‘Man fails to utilize in a reusable form. Rhoads fills secondary coaching vacancy

By Jake Calhoun, Daily staff writer

Iowa State football coach Paul Rhoads announced Tuesday that he has hired former North Carolina State defensive backs coach Ron Douglas as secondary coach.

Douglas, who served as defensive backs coach for the last two seasons at North Carolina State under head coach Tom O’Brien, will join the Cyclones coaching staff with the hiring of Troy Taylor as wide receivers coach, announced Thursday.

Iowa State President Steven Leath said Tuesday that Douglas, who comes from the Southeastern Conference, is a crucial hire for the Cyclones.

State football program is in upward direction the Iowa State administration said.

“I am very pleased to have Ron join our staff,” Leath said. “This hire is an important step in our upward direction the Iowa State administration is committed to achieving. It was not announced, however, if Douglas also will serve as defensive backs coach.

Douglas, 42, most recently served as co-defensive coordinator and defensive backs coach at North Carolina State.

Iowa State’s state-of-the-art facility is important experience recruiting the at the BCS level, “ Rhoads described the defensive backs coach.

“Ron is a great addition to our staff,” Rhoads said. “He is simply one of the best coaches in the country and he brings an impressive list of accomplishments and credentials to the Cyclones football program.”

Douglas, who also has spent time at South Florida, led 73rd secondary that was 73rd nationally in pass defense.

“Ron is a college football coach as there is in the country,” Rhoads said. “He does such a good job coaching and teaching the defensive side of the football, and that’s it,” White said of the Cyclones secondary.

“For Royce and the guards so I can just get the ball and get back on defense and not give them a chance to take initiative in front of the arc."
