Long wait for long buses

By Charles O'Brian
@iowastatedaily.com

Following a six-month delay, this spring, 302 students will be able to count on one new form of transportation at Iowa State University. The Orange Route, which is currently the busiest bus route in the state of Iowa with 1,519,827 riders during the 2011 fiscal year, will see the addition of two new Nova articulated buses.

These buses were originally supposed to be delivered to Iowa in August, 2012, prior to the start of the fall semester. The buses are now expected to arrive at CyRide sometime in February and could make their debut—at the earliest—on the Orange Route after spring break.

“CyRide’s new buses are some of the first to feature Nova’s new interior design, and they were a delay in production because Nova had to work out some bugs with the new interior design,” Kyras stated. “The second reason for the delay had to do with new paint standards for buses. Kyras stated that there are only a few places in the United States that meet the new paint standards, therefore CyRide’s buses had to get stuck behind other companies during the painting process.”

“We are frustrated, we would have loved to have them to begin the fall semester,” Kyras said. “But the other hand, we are the main transportation because of what they offer.”

The articulated buses measure 62 feet, which is currently 22 feet longer than CyRide’s largest bus. They seat 60 people but can hold 120 passengers.

The buses have a stainless steel frame, which gives them an Invinciloy strength. They contain cedar siding for easier mainte-

The idea was to turn the lids into wall art and helmets for the “Yogurt Guys,” a design student, who he considers his “big brother.”

The lids were originally collected when Shanghai added yogurt to its meal plan for CyRide’s students. The yogurt containers contributed to the collection as well.

Shaffer then placed yogurt with similar to his meal bundles at Clyde’s and Helser Hall dorm room decoration.

Ryan Huang and Elisabeth Oeverli are two freshmen with different majors, different hometowns and are from different countries, but both made the decision to join the greek system on campus.

There are four main national students in the greek system at Iowa State.

Egyptians speak up about new regime

By David Bartholomew

It’s been two years since million-strong protests in Egypt toppled the long-time government of Hosni Mubarak in a public display unheard of in the Arab world.

Major protests in Cairo and other Egyptian cities from Jan. 25 to Feb. 11, 2011, launched in response to a failed uprising organized throughout other Middle East and North African countries. The protesters were united in a common belief that Mubarak had no choice but to leave office and hand over power to the armed forces.

Since that February day, Egypt has undergone a political and cultural transition to at-least a working democracy. Egypt’s transitional moment, it is also a fragile one, and one that raders must be very careful about Mesour and El-Mahalawy said it’s hard to stay happy or optimistic with the new government in Egypt, because it’s either getting better or going into a civil war.

In El-Mahalawy’s opinion, it’s hard to stay happy or optimistic with the new government in Egypt, because it’s either getting better or going into a civil war.

However, tens of thousands of protesters have resisted the orders and have called upon Mubarak to discuss amendments to the controversial constitution recently passed by the parliament, which is seen by some as a power-grab by the military’s Supreme Council of the Armed Forces over the pre-ience of the country which was elected to hand over certain powers to the people, especially those regarding foreign affairs.

For example, it wasn’t until a year after the revolution that elections for the Parliament of Egypt were held.

"I think it’s possible that the military will con-continue to maintain substantial influence for some time," Gabiam said. "So we might have to live with that for a while. But that is not why we’re marching." She added the army will maintain substantial influence for at least a few more years, and "it’s not only because of fear." Gabiam said. "It’s also because of the fact that the army is powerful in Egypt.

The next few days and weeks will undoubtedly prove decisive in Egypt’s future. While many like El-Mahalawy are still happy that Mubarak has left, there is still much work to be done, and it starts by working with the new government.

There is nothing more to guns than those black metal guns for a general purpose. In this time, there is a relatively strong argument that gas guns and slow guns are part of our society. There are some cases where the gun was taken out of force.

When the laws stricter to obtain one, the government regulations of guns is a must. The Second Amendment states, "A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." These two words can get the gun as a physical symbol of freedom, protection, or safety, it becomes meaningful to many Americans.

Freedom, violence and safety are all important places in our society. In our country, there are some important regulations that have been taken out of force. If you wanted to be the king of all four are the same, it is impossible to take a long break out of them for a few reasons.

Many people insist that guns should stay in our society. Two weeks after the Connecticut school shooting along with other reasons, it is unrealistic for Congress to eliminate guns in our society. The right of the people to keep and bear Arms, that's the reason.

You can look at digitized copies of Parks Library, and that that was something other than just go away. Is it not better to have government awareness of the item that much stronger. Fame

Why does U.S. society obsess about so-called celebrities scandals?

Some famous people have done little to deserve our status.

Society's obsession with celebrities is almost universal. From the most common TV shows to the most obscure local news stories, the idea of a person being famous is one that the world seems to love. The term "fame" is often used to describe the attention that a person receives, whether that attention is positive or negative. In general, fame is considered a desirable thing, but it is often seen as a double-edged sword.

The Kardashian family is a perfect example of fame. Kim Kardashian's fame began with her reality TV show, "Keeping Up With the Kardashians," which aired on E! in 2007. The show documented the lives of the Kardashian family, and it quickly became one of the most popular reality TV shows. The show's success led to a spin-off show, "Kourtney and Kim," and a second spin-off show, "Khloe and Lamar." The shows have been a major source of fame for the Kardashian family, and they have appeared on a number of other reality TV shows as well.

The key to making the distinction between celebrities who do nothing and celebrities who have their own expertise is understanding the difference between occupation and celebrity. Some celebrities are rich and typically have a fortune, or high-profile parents. Think the Kardashians or even Paris Hilton. ‘Not many girls are thinking about the future when they entered the tryouts’

Many freshmen are thinking about the future when they entered the tryouts for this season. At a team meet in Minnesota, ISU girls were competed in both events and participated with an exhibition routine—which does not count toward the team score—on the balance beam. The young gymnasts, almost daily now in practice, are learning to balance the beam. That is the key if Gibson plans to make it back to where he finished last year. Gibson said he had at least 10 supporters show up to watch him wrestle. The support really helped keep him going and stay focused on the matches ahead of him. Gibson went on to defeat West Virginia's Mike Mandzik by pinning him in 3:50. “It was just fun,” Gibson said. “At 6 of them hadn’t even won in years; some of them hadn’t even won in years; some of them hadn’t even wrestled in front of my family.”

ment and comfort, backup cameras and two doors that allow for easier entry and egress of passengers.

These buses are maintained by the students through an endowed scholarship, ensuring the continued operation of the service.

Originally, CyRide intended to phase out all of their articulated buses within a couple of years, but this plan was later delayed to allow them to have a more gradual transition. However, the buses are expected to last longer than originally anticipated, providing a cost savings for the university.

The solution to the problem was then found. Shaffer would give a piece of cardstock under the lid and hand it to Schmidt to stick in the ceiling.

Shaffer said that CyRide is always looking for ways to manage their waste and improve their service, and this initiative is a step in the right direction. Schmidt and Shaffer have received positive feedback from CyRide's customers and are excited to continue this project.

Schmidt said that CyRide will continue to collect lids as long as there is demand for them. They hope to continue this initiative in the future and are open to suggestions from customers on how to use the lids.

The lid collection has also reached out to students.

"I think it’s a great idea," said Alex Babcock, a mechanical engineering student. "I have been collecting lids for a while now, and I think it’s a good way to use them."

The lid collection continues to grow, and Schmidt and Shaffer are excited to see what creative ideas students and community members will come up with. They encourage anyone who enjoys collecting lids to join the effort and help make a positive impact on their community.

Zoetrope allows creativity

By Rahkima Mayfield

Ames247 writer

Iowa Zoetrope, an independent film company based out of Ames, is providing extra opportunities for the students interested in filmmaking.

Iowa Zoetrope is owned and operated by Stephen Haydon, Jared Harken, Kip Pauson, Tyver Swain and Scotty Thompson, who are all Iowa natives. Iowa Zoetrope was formed in February 2010 with its first film, “Upperclassmen: Counterfeiting per Capit.”

Stephen Haydon, senior in performing arts and co-owner of Iowa Zoetrope, said each of the remotes used in this film came from farms coming together to form Iowa Zoetrope.

Iowa Zoetrope’s name derives from the American Zoetrope studio created by Francis Ford Coppola and George Lucas in 1966, creating films using unrolling-motion film methods.

While some, according to Haydon, might think there is only monetary value in making films, it has a more intrinsic value for the company.

“When it comes to film—not to theater or a common misconception that’s you’re only in to get famous or get rich. That isn’t the case at all here.” Haydon said.

It’s because filmmaking and creating is all part of his passion.

Because Iowa Zoetrope is a dependent film company, the entire filming budget comes directly from its own people who work in the industry, that being responsible and raising the equipment and costumes helps with costs.

“[Haydon] has always been doing mini-films for projects and a school if I could somewhat assist in that and learn. I did that and then when he asked me if I’d like to act in one, and then he said, ‘Well go do it, send it off and we can’t pay you but know, you’re doing it for free.’ Haydon said.

“[He] is the only one involved in Iowa Zoetrope who is a student of Iowa State, but he is not the only ISU student who has been involved with the company. Several students and faculty involved in Iowa Zoetrope productions include Lisa Haines, Austin Rogers, Tony Laben, Davey McCulley and Darryl Holmes, junto name sake.

Usually, students get involved because of their connections to the people involved in Iowa Zoetrope.

“Whenever it comes to film—it’s theater or acting, a common misconception that’s you’re only in it to get famous or get rich. That isn’t the case at all here.” Haydon said.

Iowa Zoetrope is looking forward for new talent and welcomes people to get involved in future productions.

“When it comes to acting or making films, we can’t pay you but know, you’re doing it for free.” Haydon said.

“To do this, it’s a fun experience and in the future, you can be a part of it.”

When "Play That Janky All-Star Battle Royale” was announced, this gaming community was excited and keen on the idea of a Super Smash Brothers-style fighting game meant for the PS3. For years, developers have been struggling to make the game stand out. The PS3 is a system designed for a different way ofthinking: It's the perfect platform for a fighting game. The game has been designed around this unique, new environment. With players being ranked by their performance, the idea is to combine the action of fighting games with the strategy of first-person shooters. The players are divided into two teams, each with a different leader. The team leader is the one who decides the strategy of the game. The other team members are the followers, who are responsible for the logistics of the game. The game itself is very different from most fighting games. The story mode is more like a movie than a game. The players are the characters, and the story is told through their actions. The gameplay is split into two modes: single-player and multiplayer. The single-player mode is where the players try to find their way through the levels, while the multiplayer mode is where players can compete against each other.
