April brings same-sex marriage concerns to US Supreme Court

By Kelly. Schiro

Same-sex couples will get their day in the Supreme Court in April. On Jan. 23, the court announced it would hear cases on whether the constitutional right to marry includes same-sex couples and if states have the right to deny same-sex couples the right to marry. As of Jan. 5, 2015, a vast majority of the United States has passed or is in the process of passing laws recognizing same-sex marriages.

Deam also said the Supreme Court should decide whether single sex preference should be a suspect class. Deam explained that single sex preference should be a suspect class.

Each chapter is waiting for the plaintiff’s brief due Feb. 27. Oral arguments are expected to be heard by the court late April, with a final ruling sometime in June.

Deam said that same-sex couples and the court will decide on the next steps.

A suspect class includes any group that the court believes may be the subject of discrimination. Affirmative action programs are one example of a suspect class. Some members of the court have previously ruled on cases involving same-sex couples and the court will decide whether a suspect class is present.

something new this fall," Nolan said. "We are offering all the six programs online using Adobe Connect Pro, so that folks who live in Washington or Florida can watch live or request a recording. We want all ISU retirees to be able to participate in our events and programs.

Another big event that the association arranges is the Memorial Day Ceremony. "The last ceremony was coordinated on Memorial Day to remember the loss of retired employees and their spouses who have died. "For many of us who are long-time employees, this is a sacred tradition," said Michael Meier, director of the ISU Retirees Association. "A number of us would like to keep these connections with Iowa State University.

Clyde K. Walker, the vice-chairman of the ISU Retirees Association, said the association continues to have an increasing number of members each year. "Retirees tend to be an older group of people," Walker said. "They are concerned about their health and financial planning. Things like health insurance and retirement savings plans. They also are concerned about independence and social contact with other retired people.

Walker who chairs the program committee, said, "We have three main programs each year. One is the "isudaily" online newsletter, which is received by 15,000 people. The second program is the "Isu Connection," which is a newsletter that goes to 10,000 people. The third program is the "Isu Connection," which is a newsletter that goes to 10,000 people.

The next program is other events and information about the ISU Retirees Association can be found at www.isualum.org/retirees. More information about the ISU Retirees Association can be found at their office in the Center for Alumni Affairs. All university faculty and staff are eligible for admission to the association upon retirement.

Morality through religious eyes

Know the risks of tanning

A call from my dermatologist tells me I have multiple melanoma tumors in my brain. Back in Iowa, scans showed I had two large melanoma tumors in my brain radiation, so there goes the idea of me seeing my great-grandchildren. I am now on a daily medicine called Yervoy, which costs $50,000 per infusion. As of now, I am in the top 10 percent of those diagnosed with melanoma. Back in the spring semester, I had no idea this day would come.

There were a lot of great accomplishments this year. However, the increased enrollment in the fall semester has contributed to a step backward in the quality of life at Iowa State. Crowded sidewalks,4 packed lecture halls, uncomfortable waiting lines, and congested traffic all seem to be among some of the most pressing issues.

We must continue moving forward. However, the university administration should establish a more open forum for students to express their voices. And students can continue to give us an opportunity to learn about the student experience.

The testing centers topic is the perfect example. The university administration should host at least one more open forum for students to express their voices. And students can continue to give us an opportunity to learn about the student experience.
Iowa State prepares for TCU in tough Big 12

By Alex Gookin

Near the end of the first half against the Texas Longhorns, Georges Niang got the ball on the fast break, poured it around and lobbed it up toward the rim for Jameel McKay to finish the alley-oop. Less than a minute into the second half, Niang hit McKay from nearly the same identical play.

That's the play McKay lore — it's from 85 — in fact, it was Niang and Melvin Ejim who mastered the play last season. It was against TCU when Ejim dropped a Big 12 record 48 points that Niang found him for the alley-oop. Coach Fred Hoiberg has taken over Ejim's role as not only the wing basketoul but also the go-to guy in the backcourt. McKay's play in the backcourt has allowed Niang to focus on his shot, which has been a major improvement.

“I don’t think we’re going to have any shortage about that, has to score,” said Niang. “He’s the best in the nation, you know.”

While McKay’s play is known throughout the Big 12, Niang has spent a lot of time on the court the past few years, a testament that McKay isn’t the only one to “get open.” Niang will have to get open to get to the rim for the alley-oop.

“I think that, Jarmal McKay is doing a great job around the rim hitting those and really scoring for us,” Niang said. “Him and Dustin (Hogue) are a force to be reckoned with down there so I think if those two keep playing their game, we’re going to be alright.”

Iowa State will have to take advantage of McKay’s presence to get to the rim and Niang will have to excel in the backcourt to keep the defense off balance.

Top-12 spot hangs in the balance for Cyclone Hockey

By Luke Manderfeld

He ain’t got no confidence. He ain’t got no worries. “We just need to control our puck and make them play our game, the last thing we want is for them to get into ours,” said J.P. Gillies, the Cyclones' No. 1 goalie. “If we can keep the pressure off, we can stick and we can use our shield better.”

The Cyclones have several weapons to choose from, with a total of five players with over 10 points on the season. McKay is an option, but not one that is all that available to the team right now. McKay’s points come in bunches and are not too often. It’s been a season of ups and downs for McKay, with him scoring one game and scoring none in the next.

“I don’t think we’re gong to have any shortage about that, has to score,” said Niang. “He’s the best in the nation, you know.”

On the road again, the ISU men’s track team is preparing for the Buckaroo Invitational Team. Some like to travel, some would rather stay in. Either way, winter is here, the Buckaroo Invitational, this is the first road meet for ISU State.

There may be a road aspect this week, but the preparation’s changed hasn’t changed.

“Our focus at practice, as interesting enough, is to throw," said junior hammer thrower on Iowa State’s all-time list. "But I think we’re trying to throw hammer. After I have a throw on this, I’m getting a throw on this and then I’m going to do this. So I’m trying to throw hammer and I’m working on this."

For senior Chonlada Biekert’s goal at the NCAA Championships, she’s been practicing for a score and keeping her mindset to practice minded.

"[Assistant coach Pina] said: ‘I like this better because you can play on a court here because you get the same mental setup. It’s a good match to practice for the NCAA Championships,’” Grove-McDonough said. “We’re going to take a break to practice mindfully and then we’re going to start thinking about what’s going to be the best way to go out there and kill yourself."

"I like this better because it’s a good way to practice in the real tournament," Grove-McDonough said. "I saw the mental setup and I’m good at it."

For a distance runner, practice has always been about staying steady.

"It’s a lot to do fitness right now because we’re not always at full strength, but at least in the workouts, it’s been good," sophomore Andrea Grove-McDonough said. "It’s good to get plenty with a little bit of a break."

For senior senior Brian Becker, Biekert’s goal at the NCAA Championships, certainty we’ll break the school record. "I’m really on the time of that about," Grove-McDonough said.

"We’re going to take a break to practice mindfully and then we’re going to start thinking about what’s going to be the best way to go out there and kill yourself."

The woman became sick due to the sexual assault and vomited in the early morning hours of March 30. A detective and officer from the Ames Police Department went to the apartment where the sexual assault occurred and spoke with the woman. The woman then woke up around 8 a.m. on March 30 and called her roommate, whom she was staying with at the time. The roommate then notified the woman’s advisor, who contacted the police department.

The investigation of the sexual assault was handled by the Ames Police Department, who spoke with the woman and collected evidence from the apartment. The woman stated that she had been sexually assaulted by a male acquaintance, who had been following her around campus. The woman’s roommate also stated that she had seen the male acquaintance in the apartment building on several occasions

The investigation did not include any contact with the suspect, and the woman was not interviewed by investigators. The suspect was not contacted by the police department and was not interviewed by investigators.

 cardiorespiratory arrest were observed. The victim was taken to the hospital where she received medical treatment for the sexual assault. The woman was discharged from the hospital a few hours after the incident and went home to her dorm.

Sexual assault victims are entitled to certain rights under the Clery Act, which requires colleges and universities to issue timely warnings in situations involving sex offenses. Iowa State University is required to issue timely warnings as part of the required Clery Act notification process. Iowa State’s Safety and Support Services office (515) 294-1020 is available to help students understand their rights and what to do if they are a victim of sexual assault.

When a student reports a sexual assault, it is important to know what to expect. The university will begin the sexual assault investigation and provide support and resources for the student. The student will be asked to provide information about the incident and any evidence that may be available. The university will then conduct an investigation to determine what happened.

Iowa State University is committed to providing a safe and respectful environment for all students, and we encourage anyone who may have information about a sexual assault to report it to the university. If you or someone you know has been sexual assaulted, please contact the university’s Safety and Support Services office (515) 294-1020 for assistance.

ASSAULT p2

The sexual assault that occurred on campus was the first reported in 2012. A suspended member of the fraternity was arrested for second-degree sexual assault on March 27. The investigation is still ongoing, and the fraternity’s charter will be reviewed.

The suspension of the fraternity was also due to the first reported sexual assault on campus in 2012. The fraternity was put on the education disruption list, and the charter review resulted in the fraternity being placed on probation. The fraternity was also removed from the national chapter and was put on the education disruption list for the next 18 months.

During the investigation of the sexual assault, the university conducted a review of the fraternity’s activities to determine if there were any violations of the fraternity’s hotel policies. The university reviewed the fraternity’s events and found no evidence of the violation.

As a result of the investigation, the university imposed a suspension on the fraternity, and the charter was put on the education disruption list. The fraternity’s charter review will be conducted, and the fraternity will be evaluated for reinstatement. The fraternity’s charter will be reviewed by the national chapter, and the charter will be reinstated if the fraternity meets the requirements.
