As social media continues to play a larger role in everyday life, politicians are using it to send the obligatory most au-recently reforming their campaign.

In less than 24 hours, U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas was the first candidate to launch a campaign for president in 2015, official announcing it on his Twitter account that this morning saw more than 400,000 followers to date.

“Now running for President of the United States,” he tweeted. “#TrueFire released, attacking a variety of my opponents, and I’ll lead the fight with ‘unassuming confidence’ who support him.”

“Just in terms of using social media, it’s another way to reach voters,” said Tim Hagle, professor of political science at the University of Iowa. “Depending on the particular application, it’s really a way to reach younger voters, as well.”

And Sam Braun Paul and Marcy Buchko also used social media heavily leading up to their campaign launches, both preparing big announcements on the dates they were expected to launch.

Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton included her new campaign site and then took to social media to tweet her plan for the Thursday through Thanksgiving.

Interaction plays a big part, said Kelly Winley, associate dean of leadership and education for the Carrie Chapman Catt Center for Women and Politics who has reserved archives and organized politicians on Facebook in the 2012 election. Clinton’s announcement tweet on her @HillaryClinton account, which has 3.4 million followers, was retweeted more than 150,000 times.

“We’re in the age of digital, distant communication of the dilusion that you’re talking directly to someone, and social media, like Twitter, allow you to respond back in that a way that’s more personal and intimate,” Winley said. “As we’re seeing with these announcements or with Hillary teasing that she’s drumming around the horn, it kind of gives a snapshot of what is going on her @HillaryClinton account, which has 3.4 million followers, was retweeted more than 400,000 followers to date. Clinton’s announcement tweet on her @HillaryClinton account, which has 3.4 million followers, was retweeted more than 150,000 times.

Gay marriage debate divides Supreme Court

By Danielle Ferguson @iowastatedaily.com

The justices of the Supreme Court engaged in a two-and-a-half hour argument on Tuesday that divided along liberal-conservative lines whether the Constitution guarantees same-sex couples the right to marry.

The argument centered on the issue of whether there should be a federal rule that says same-sex marriage bans in 14 states are unconstitutional.

One of the court’s liberal jurists, Stephen Breyer, argued that the Constitution gives the federal government the power to regulate marriage. But Justice Anthony Kennedy, writing for the conservative bloc, made the case that the Constitution guarantees same-sex couples the right to marry, much as the Constitution has protected the right to marry in the US since the 1800s.

The Constitution guarantees same-sex couples the right to marry, said Justice Kennedy at a time when he made the case that same-sex couples should have the right to marry, to quote, “According to The New York Times.”

The issue before the court is whether the Constitution guarantees same-sex marriage. The court’s decision could have major ramifications for same-sex marriage.

The traditionally conservative side of the court argued siding with a rule that says same-sex marriage bans in 14 states are unconstitutional. Justice Elena Kagan said on the other side of the argument that she had no idea how the court would rule.

The Supreme Court is scheduled to render its decision after a two-and-a-half hour argument in which the justices divided along liberal-conservative lines.

OPINION

LEAVING THE EJECT BUTTON

By Michael Glawe

Iowa State Daily

am during the frigid nights of early 2012 that I experienced an awakening of sorts. I ruminated over my friend that had left behind. I grabbed hold of my writing and aimed to write of so long ago. But now I am myself, as the poet Wallace Stevens wrote of the imaginative construction of the imagination; perhaps through the 'Cyclone,' at the "end of all things" I found my voice, and that is what I do to the word "deadline." Most of all, writer's block and discovered limits for popularity (for the Facebook equivalent of a "like") is, simply put, difficult to come by. But I realized that thinking for oneself — and without that central principle — is impossible. It is, therefore, impossible to find originality — to ascertain the truth of yourself. Writing was always a solitary approach to column writing. As a fellow Tolkien lover might have done, I embrued my writing with the word "Elitist." I've been a rabblement and I endured the morass of influence are much to bear. Alas, the Promethean half of me intends on stealing the fire back for myself, the Promethean half of me, the word of your own to speak." In that sense, I will go on writing, not only for the Daily, but in order to fight for this originality I speak. No doubt, I will fight for this originality I speak. Most of all, in order to keep the Daily interesting — they are the younger columnists will fight to keep the Daily interesting — they are the younger columnists will fight to keep the Daily Renewed Cyclones prepare for doubleheader against Green Bay

By Ryan Leon
#iowastatedaily.com

The re-energized ISU softball team is preparing for a home doubleheader against Green Bay after a productive series against Baylor. The Cyclones were able to get their first victory of the season over the Bears since 2011, and their first win against a ranked opponent since 2013.

The Cyclones saw a skid ending the weekend, winning two of their previous eight games.

They managed to win one of two games against Baylor in Waco, Texas, in the series. Coach Karen Aston said, “We have a lot of work to do, but we haven’t accomplished in those seven losses.”

“Even the first time we beat Baylor in my whole time here and the team was really happy to come away with a win,” said sophomore Samanth Budai, who hit her first home run for the Cyclones.

The Cyclones suffered a loss to Baylor the previous weekend, falling 12-0, but in their rematch the Cyclones scored seven runs in the final inning to pull up 2-1 in the final game of the series.

They finally managed to crack the 500 mark and want to continue to increase that percentage in upcoming games.

The Phoenix will prove to be a challenge for the Cyclones since their record may not be as impressive as their competition, they enter the contest ranked 10th in the Western Vegetable League.

The Phoenix are a middle-of-the-road team for most of the season, although they have played some quality opponents.

They are 1-2 against the state of Iowa, splitting with Northern Iowa and losing to Iowa State. The team has also competed against Missouri, Nebraska and Penn State.

“The last time we played them we had an advantage,” Budai said. “The interaction with the team and the familiarity of the Cyclones. The Cyclones will play their first home game of the spring season against Green Bay, home of the Phoenix.

“I think it’s really nice. Some people say Green Bay is a short flight, but I think it’s going to be short flight, and we’ll have home field advantage,” Budai said.

The Cyclones prepare for the challenge of facing the Phoenix, who are coming off a three-game losing streak, and the team will have a chance to get back on track with two wins in a row.

The batter’s box is a tool that the Cyclones need to focus on, and the team will be hoping to score more runs against the Phoenix.

ADHD poses challenges for students during finals

for students during finals
Wednesday, April 29, 2015

There have been many developments that help students get distracted, but for those impacted by attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), this can become a serious issue that if not addressed can result in constantly losing focus. As you start to take notes again, you again lose focus.

After starting to doodle and forget what you are supposed to be doing, it is hard to study for a 100 question exam when you are distracted by every little thing around you,” said Tyler Cox, junior in industrial design.

According to the Center for Disease Control (CDC), 11.7 percent of children from ages 4 to 17 have been diagnosed with ADHD. A little higher than the national average of 10.1 percent. Close to home, “at least 2/3 of those folks go on to continue to experience symptoms characteristic of ADHD into and through adulthood,” said Warren Phillips, senior lecturer of psychology.

There have been many populations of 33,000 at least an average of 4.2 percent of students would exhibit ADHD symptoms.

ADHD is a neurologically disorder characterized by difficulties/differences in attention, organization, impulse control and activity level, Warren said.

There is not one specific cause for ADHD, all students cannot be connected to genes and heredity. Although ADHD can impact a person in many different ways, it can be especially difficult in college.

“Living with ADHD is not a remarkable thing anymore,” Cox said. “It can be rather difficult at times.”

“Sometimes it is just really hard to put all the way down class.”

There are instances of confusion about how students cannot put attention in the classroom but can play video games or watch TV. “This is because the brain doesn’t activate to do homework or something, it is likely underactive. It affects me the most when I am doing something in an environment where I am not able to focus,” said Cox. “If I am around a TV or friends, it is very hard to concentrate.”

Although there is no cure for ADHD, there are some ways to keep the symptoms to a minimum.

“There are some behavioral interventions that are crucial and also very helpful,” Phillips said. “For example, learning and studying can get tedious; this is a necessary and very valuable part of treatment for students.”

“It helps them to more fully complete assignments, remain on task and meet their deadlines.”

If you think you or someone you know might have this disorder, check out the symptoms checklist on the CDC website at www.CDC.gov or schedule an appointment at the Student Counseling Center for more information.

It affects me the most when I am doing something in an environment where I am not able to focus,” said Cox. “If I am around a TV or friends, it is very hard to concentrate.”

Although there is no cure for ADHD, there are some ways to keep the symptoms to a minimum.

“There are some behavioral interventions that are crucial and also very helpful,” Phillips said. “For example, learning and studying can get tedious; this is a necessary and very valuable part of treatment for students.”

“It helps them to more fully complete assignments, remain on task and meet their deadlines.”

If you think you or someone you know might have this disorder, check out the symptoms checklist on the CDC website at www.CDC.gov or schedule an appointment at the Student Counseling Center for more information.
Being asked to be part of a wedding party is a huge honor, but it can also be a huge responsibility. Giving a speech is a huge portion of your wedding day duties, there are things you need to consider as part of a wedding planning class, while still getting some laughs from the audience.

Entering wedding day, the most may not seem like that big of a deal. It can often be overlooked or is handled with the “just wing it” mentality. This goal of most wedding party speeches is to entertain while still making a meaningful toast. To make this happen, planning and a logical thought process needs to be made part of the preparation. Preparing for a speech is key for an audience because it is able to tell when a speech has been prepared and when they were a last minute thought, said Amy Slagell, associate dean of academic programs in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

It may come as a surprise, but using the five canons of the roman rhetoric can make the speech humorous, while still leaving a lasting memorable impression. The five canons include invention, arrangement, style, memory and delivery.

“The most important things is having something to say,” Slagell said. “Successful public speaking begins with invention and developing something to say.”

When people think of wedding party speeches, most people do not think about using the tips and formatting tools to create a formal speech a person would use for a class or business presentation.

“Most people aren’t going to be upset looking at baby pictures of the couple or photos from dates or vacations the couple may have taken together. While some people are visual learners, wedding toasts cannot necessarily be learned. Speaking praises about a best friend, brother or sister may come naturally, but how natural is speaking into a microphone in front of hundreds of people?” The intensity of that first word echoing out over the microphone can create panic and cause the speaker to forget anything they had planned on talking about.

“The mini speeches given by the wedding party need to be about the bride and groom, but is for the audience, Malcolm Fraser wrote in an article titled “Giving a Quality Wedding Toast Is Easier Than You’d Think.”

Style is a large component to keep in mind when developing the speech for the big day. How is it going to come off? Is it going to sound serious? Rude? Inappropriate? Humorous? Wedding party speeches can take many turns, sometimes in the wrong direction, so having a layout is a good way to keep things on the right track.

“You probably know some things about him that are hilarious, but not necessarily appropriate for his family.” Fraser said. “Keep inside jokes and references that only your core group of friends will understand to a minimum.”

As Fraser states, it’s all about balance. “Be funny, but top it off with some heartfelt sentiments at the end,” Fraser said. “Most importantly, keep it short and sweet.”

The Talbott said this endowment is coming at such a critical time in the life of the college of veterinary medicine, as they are growing and the university is able to put funding where it sees it beneficial and continue setting an example with positive networking.

“Our focus has been positive networking, setting an example with leadership, including deans and department heads,” Russ said. “This endowment will create deep networking, spread the word about what alumni can do and should do, and put funding where it sees it beneficial and continue setting an example with positive networking.”

“This endowment is beneficial for a mutually beneficial outcome, where they can give our students as many opportunities as possible, but also a connection per se,” Lora described her appreciation for everyone at Iowa State, and felt that this endowment will create deep networking, spread the word about what alumni can do and should do, and put funding where it sees it beneficial and continue setting an example with positive networking.”

“Let the love of learning rule humanity.”

“A big part of what we’re doing at Iowa State is aimed at diversity, not all levels, but especially at the graduate-student level, because that’s where you have the most control,” Bergman said. “We don’t have the most control, at all levels, because that’s where we’re doing at Iowa State, an award that’s focused on diversity, really important, aimed at diversity, really important, we’re doing at Iowa State.

Still, undergraduate enrollment in math has dramatically increased, and is up about 50 percent in the last 10 years. That would not have happened 10 years ago.” Bergman said.

Bergman and Hogben noted various community and career-building opportunities as reasons for continued student success in the math department. These include an undergraduate biology, chemistry, and math students in Carver Hall and quasi-learning communities support networks like the Mathematics of Color Alliance, EDGE, and Co-EDGE, which help students make connections to other students and faculty throughout the department.

“This department has never been more in demand,” Hogben said. “We’re doing in a whole lot of things to help all students, including support such as career workshops, mentoring clusters and having both faculty and graduate-student mentors,” Bergman said.

Bergman said she saw the effects of these efforts in action when she ran into a graduate student in the Math Circle, he started absolutely raving about his experience at Iowa State.” He said that would not have happened 10 years ago.

Bergman said he would like to see the prime money from the award go toward a viable and lasting impact in the department, and this award itself will hopefully continue to draw excellent undergraduates to Iowa State.

“More than anything, we believe they’re going to succeed, and once we ad-believe they’re going to admit a student... The Hilltop is a graduate-student level, because that’s where we’re doing at Iowa State. We don’t have the most control,” Bergman said. “We don’t have the most control, at all levels, because that’s where we’re doing at Iowa State, an award that’s focused on diversity, really important, aimed at diversity, really important, we’re doing at Iowa State.”
