Being Iowa State’s mascot takes hard work, dedication

By Carter Collins
collinsej@iowastatedaily.com

Cy the Cardinal is not the mascot for Iowa State, he’s a celebrity. But having one of the most well-known mascots and “celebrities” in the state of Iowa isn’t all fun and games.

The ISU Masquerade Squad, the students who become Cy, are made up of one female and one male ISU students. The changeover of Cy is spanned 30 days out of the year, including all major ISU athletic events.

Over the years the Cy suit has undergone many major transformations. In 1914, Cy was made mostly from chicken skin and is兑换, which did not allow much movement. Today he is made of thick padding and an outer layer of “bucky bear” material that allows a much wider range of movement.

Today’s Cy suit comes in many different views, but only one member of the squad travels with Cy when he receives mail — even his own. When Cy receives mail — even his own. When Cy receives mail — even his own.

It seems as though every single election is the same. Politics, politics, politics. Bob Schieffer recently asked, “Is there anything new about this election?”

The answer is Cy. Cy the Cardinal is not just Iowa State’s mascot, but he’s also a celebrity. The Cy suit has been planned to highlight and rejuvenate Cyclones culture.

Across campus, events have been planned to highlight and rejuvenate Cyclones culture. From Oct. 24 is National Food Day and beyond, Cy will be at National Campus Sustainability Symposium events, the National Campus Library Free-Speech Zone, and the Conversations Dining Center.

Cy is not the only one to see Cy this week; there will be a Cy appearance on the South lawn of MacKay Hall on Oct. 23.

One final face-off

Romney, Obama spar about role in foreign policy

By David Batholomew

http://iowastatedaily.com

The final presidential debate of the election season took place between President Barack Obama and Republican candidate Mitt Romney on Monday in Kildee Hall for the 100th ISU Homecoming.

The ISU Ambassadors hosted their first debate of the election season, and the 100th Bi-Centennial celebration. The debate was hosted by the ISU College Democrats and College Republicans.

The debate centered around the different parties debating over a variety of topics. At the start of the debate, Mitt Romney went on the offensive, questioning President Barack Obama’s record on the global financial crisis.

Romney responded by pointing out that Obama’s record on the economy was not strong, and that he had failed to create jobs during his time in office.

Obama countered by saying that Romney was wrong about his record, and that he had created more jobs than Romney during his time as governor of Massachusetts.

The debate continued with both candidates answering questions about the future of the economy.

Romney and Obama both said that they would create jobs and stimulate economic growth, but they disagreed on how they would do it. Romney said that he would cut taxes and reduce regulations, while Obama said that he would focus on investing in education and infrastructure.

The debate ended with both candidates promising to work together to find solutions to the problems facing the country.

Cyl's head creates challenges for the ISU Mascot Squad. The head is strapped on the squad member's head, much like a helmet. A simple knock can easily jostle the neck of the person inside the suit.

"It doesn't take long for fans to know that Cy is present on the field or the court because of Cy's dominant personality," said Aleksander Poniatowski, a squad member and junior in mechanical engineering.

The squad works to keep the basic moves of Cy the same, to unify his image. But many of them have their own "trademarks." Some include doing fist throws, shooting half court shots during basketball games, acting like the "big shot" or sticking their tongue out inside the suit when people say "Smile Cy," when they mean photo.

"Just take more than one picture with Cy so we can get one that is not blurry or bad," Kyle Behrens, squad member and junior in agricultural business, said. "We [the squad] can't be standing around. We have to be productive for the mascot when they are at an event and have a good time."

"I am very thankful for all the fans that approach us and ask us to fulfill your wish," Baker said. "If Cy becomes a "dirty bird" at the end of the game, it's not an object for us to acquire. But we work hard to keep Cy clean and attractive because he is not a lowly bird."

The members of the squad agreed that Cy's hygiene is very key. Only after long days does Cy's head is rarely washed by equipment managers, only after long days does hygiene is well kept. Only after long days does enormous amounts of Febreze.

"Time management in the suit with the awkward situations. They said it's worth the smiles, the laughs and the awkward situations."

"Washing does put wear on the suit, and stopping to take multiple photos can be unproductive for the mascot when they are at an event."

"Washing does put wear on the suit, and time management out of the suit, which they say is the most challenging for them," Baker said. "Baker and the squad agreed being Cy is exhausting."
Has the GOP won peace?

S onday’s presidential debate was one of the most important in recent times. Many had hoped that the debate would provide a clear and concise discussion of the candidates’ positions on a range of important issues. However, the debate was marred by interruptions, personal attacks, and a lack of substance. As a result, it is difficult to determine whether either candidate emerged as the clear winner.

At the start of the debate, both candidates were expected to make a strong case for their policies and their approach to governing. However, both candidates spent much of their time attacking each other rather than addressing the issues at hand. This was particularly evident when Trump launched into a series of personal attacks against Clinton, while Clinton accused Trump of being a phony and a fraud.

Throughout the debate, both candidates tried to portray themselves as the strong and capable leader that the country needs. Trump, for example, repeatedly emphasized his business acumen and his ability to create jobs and stimulate the economy. Clinton, on the other hand, focused on her experience as Secretary of State and her record on foreign policy.

Despite the heated nature of the debate, there were some positive aspects. For example, the candidates both agreed on the need to address climate change and to invest in renewable energy. Additionally, both candidates expressed support for the Affordable Care Act and the need to expand access to healthcare.

However, the debate also highlighted some of the challenges that the candidates face. Trump, for example, struggled to provide specific details on his plan to build a wall along the Mexican border and to deport all undocumented immigrants. Clinton, on the other hand, faced criticism for her speech on 9/11 and her handling of the Clinton Foundation.

In conclusion, while Sunday’s debate was not without its flaws, it did provide an opportunity for the candidates to outline their visions for the country and to engage in a meaningful discussion. It is clear that the outcome of the election will have a significant impact on America’s future, and it is up to each of us to cast a vote that reflects our values and our hopes for the country.

GSB must be professional, approachable

Connecting with constituents is a crucial aspect of governance. It is important for GSB to communicate effectively with their constituents while improving GSB’s reputation as a whole.

When wearing costumes, the senators’ approachability, there is a risk that it may also cause some constituents to lose respect in their senators, which is crucially troublesome when considering how far GSB senators have come in connecting with their constituents while improving GSB’s reputation as a whole. In the past, GSB members have dressed in costumes to a GSB meeting is not appropriate and hurts the public perception. Similarly, wearing Halloween costumes at the Oct. 31 meeting.

While GSB has made strides in improving their approachability, there is still room for improvement. For instance, the way some senators dress at GSB meetings is not appropriate and hurts the public perception. Similarly, wearing Halloween costumes at the Oct. 31 meeting.

With this in mind, it is important for GSB to continue improving their communication with the people they represent. This can be achieved by being approachable, making sure constituents should be made available to the public in documents, video and audio. Also, the hall of senatorial statues should start up by date, which it currently is not. Finally, GSB should take to-date websites with important information on it improving the professionalism of GSB and be more approachable, making students connect to their senators.

Iowa State Daily begins search for new dean of Business

By Madison Martin

On Oct. 1, the Office of the Senior Vice President and Provost announced the search for the new dean of Business.

Currently, Michael Crum, Ruan Chair in accounting and supply chain management, serves as interim dean for the College of Business. Crum moved into the deanship after previous vice president and provost, Libby Hirschi, retired in March.

The search committee consists of 12 members: Pam White, dean of the College of Human Sciences, and Dean Doria Ceder, interim dean for the College of Information Management and Administration; the academic personnel, as the committee co-chairs; Bob Schweers, director of communications for the Office of the Senior Vice President and Provost; provided information about the search committee.

“Typically for a dean search, we have someone who is an associate or assistant professor here along with a board from the other colleges,” Schweers said.

Most dean searches, candidates are often nominated.

“We actively soliciting nominations,” Schweers said. “These nominations may come internally. So you have a faculty member who say, ‘Oh, I came from Harvard and I had the best professor there who I think would be a great dean.’ They forward those names and then often times we’ll reach out those people and say to them, ‘You were recommended as someone for this position. Are you interested?’ Then they are, they have the option to take the application to apply.”

Not only are nominations taken internally but also sometimes there will be nominations from outside. Dean positions also have a problem like the normal faculty problems as well, Schweers said.

“You won’t find it in The [Des Moines] Register if you look closely,” Schweers joked. “But with those advertisements we find people that we may not have thought of or who weren’t recommended in any other way.”

There are a few steps to the application process. Applicants are first narrowed down based on their CV. After that, those selected may have their references called upon. Then a smaller group that is more qualified.

“Eventually we invite them to the campus,” Schweers said. “We have what we call ‘airport interviews,’ where people can fly in quick, have their interview. After that, they fly home.”

These ‘airport interviews’ are used for a number of reasons.

“Primarily really at the finalist stage, you probably don’t want your current university employer to know you’re looking. Schweers said. “So it’s a way for them to discretely come and talk about their qualifications and why they think they would be good fit for the job in the end.”

The search, having just started, will be under way.

“Applications are invited to campus. These candidates are invited to campus. They have a chance to talk to the search committee and people involved with the college. From that, feedback is provided to the search committee.”

“The search committee takes all the feedback it get from the open forums, faculty and from other search committee members themselves, and comes up with a recommendation essentially to the provost, who then, in consultation with others, makes the final decision of who the next dean of the College of Business will be,” Schweers said.

There is no timeline for when the new dean will be hired. The search, having started only a week, is fast-paced to actively taking nominations.

“I’m excited about one thing,” Schweers said. “That I couldn’t be more excited about. I couldn’t be more excited about.”

On the corner of South Davenport and Fifth Street, an abandoned building sits across the street from Texas Roadhouse that was waiting for a business to move in.

“Texas Roadhouse just waiting for a business to move in. The building that Chipotle is moving into was once a Sprint cellphone store and a local bar. Texas Roadhouse was closed after the 2010 flood. The building has been fixed since then, and Chipotle will be moving in with no neighbor, AT&T nearby.”

The building was one of several buildings that were cleaned and renovated for Chipotle.

“Once the building is cleaned, they will get the inside of the building fixed up and then Chipotle will move in,” Schweers said.

The building Chipotle is moving into was once a Sprint cellphone store and a local bar. Texas Roadhouse was closed after the 2010 flood. Chipotle, founded in 1993, has been named on a list of the fastest-growing restaurant chains since 2006.

The building has been fixed since then, and Chipotle will be moving in with no neighbor, AT&T nearby.

“I’m excited about it,” Schweers said. “I couldn’t be more excited about. I couldn’t be more excited about.”
