A mong fields of corn, rows of tractors and marching cowboy boots, one would never expect to find one of the best apparel, merchandising and design programs in the nation.

Iowa State University is ranked No. 2 on the Top 50 fashion schools in the world, according to Fashionista.com. The website’s team of writers and editors evaluated each apparel and design program based on many factors, such as job placement rates, student and alumni feedback, business training and social life. Other schools on the list include Central Saint Martins in London at No. 1, London College of Fashion in London at No. 2, Parsons the New School for Design in New York at No. 3, and the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York at No. 6.

Apparel majors can go to Iowa State for a full four years, study abroad, attend field study trips in places like Los Angeles, New York and Chicago, create a senior line in the fashion show and complete an internship in a major metropolitan city, all for less than the price of one year only at the Fashion Institute of Technology.

Ann Thy, adviser of the apparel program, said this is just one of the perks. However, she said, “There are so many more gifts from all around the world choose to earn their degree in apparel, merchandising and design at Iowa State.”

GSB candidates debate issues

By Makayla Yendell
@iowastatedaily.com

The Government of the Student Body presidential debate on Thursday centered on what each candidate plans to create in place of Veishea, as well as how they stand on other issues relating to the student experience at Iowa State.

Both candidates agreed that they wanted to introduce an event similar to Veishea, but where students could find something different each year. They also differed greatly on when they believed students were interested in an event.

Amanda Lomis, who is currently the director of special events for GSB and is running for president, said she wants to hold an event in the fall.

Lomis said she would avoid an event in the fall because it has already been proven that an event in spring does not work in the best interest of students, their safety and the university.

Lomis said her event would take place in early fall on a weekend so as not to interfere with football games. She also said she has been in contact with the Iowa State Alumni and Fan Relations Committee to ensure that the event would not overlap with Homecoming.

Greek Ambassador program gives new students chance to learn about system

By Sarah Muller

Prospective students visiting the University of Iowa will see more fresh faces this semester as three Greek Ambassador programs will be running in their respective colleges to introduce the programs to the incoming students.

The college of Business celebrates, recognizes supply chain major

By Susan Gaulin

A trip from Ames to Chicago put three of the possible students in the college of Business and the Supply Chain Management Club, 14 students in total, the college of Business' first ever Greek Ambassador program. The week was created to promote awareness of the supply chain major and careers in the field.

Students in the supply chain management program learn about the four stages of supply chain production planning, sourcing, manufacturing, and inventory management. Students must manage production, purchases, assembly and distribution to complete the process.

There is a possibility that students may have the opportunity to be a supply chain process from low to high, the full supply chain process.

Students start with the distribution of a product in Ames, travel to Chicago for experiences with distribution and finally to China to see the process is made and funded for delivery. Once the students get to China, the process is reversed back to America as they must reverse the process in reverse order.

How the week went was because many students are uncertain of what supply chain management truly is.

To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging day.

Breitbart, Sweere correct choice for GSB

By Madison Ward

They’re demanding equal rights. Women, men. Sound crazy? But that’s exactly what happened even more than 50 years ago, when the movie “Night of the Iguana” hit theaters. On their website, they advertise their accomplishments and their experience, but not the importance of women’s accomplishments and experience necessary to understand how female justices could bring the country.”

Lack of experience hurts Loomis, Leidahl

By Richard Hartree, student

I must express my concern with the student government platforms of the Amanda Loomis and Kathryn Leidahl ticket. On their website, they advocate for a “democratic library,” an unfalsifiable idea that would require approval by both the Board of Regents and Faculty Senate. Further, the claim is necessary to support the status quo. If the Library 160 is not a polling place, which can result in significant voter turnout understanding. In their campaign, the students of Library 160 and Leidahl also advocate for more fees on students for dropout classes. Because the register’s office depends on these fees, they will in turn increase the prices for students, which is not an effective way to address the concerns of women. If they don’t like the current, then the majority of students would lose money that they currently have. Unfortunately, Loomis and Leidahl lack the experience necessary to understand critical student government issues.

Dan Breitbart and Megan Sweere are exactly what Iowa State needs. Both candidates were as our BGT interviewers’ choice today. Dan’s did not have a singlenid main goal of their campaign. Their platform is a serious and focused individual who wants to better the American economy. Moving forward, I encourage you to explore other options in voting on campus. ISU men's golf returns to desert

By Mike Randelmannwwastatedaily.com

It could be Arizona’s warm climate that allows the abundance of tournaments that it offers, but whatever the case, Iowa State’s men’s golf team is all about the Grand Canyon State these days. These were big tournaments for the Cyclones, prepping them for the National Collegiate Athletic Association Tournament on March 26-28 in Tucson, Ariz., the third straight year Iowa State and its second in Tucson. The tournament will be held at Omni Tucson National, colloquially referred to as the Seaworld Golf Club that Iowa State is familiar with.

With six competitive days left in their fall season, as well as their third meet of the season before the Arizona adventure, the Cyclones have been able to truly work on refining each and every facet of the game. A true team effort that has since turned into a championship-type work ethic.

“I think we have the mentality of being in a championship-type environment,” said head coach Jay Ronayne. “They’ve had a few close games these past two seasons, the Cyclones have taken into account — the pre-game plan. “But we have a great group of players, they’ve just got to stay sharp and all that,” said Ronayne.

For the Cyclones, this has been an individual tournament that has been going on, but the improvement from tournament to tournament has been in constant improvement.

This week, Iowa State will have one of its better opportunities to final finish in the top 25 in the field and only four out of the 15 teams and tied for sixth in the world, the better for the future. When next week's Wyoming Desert Invitational tournament spring regular season, they expect to rise to the top 36 teams that aren’t of its untapped potential.

As Iowa State has proven to do in several rounds, the Cyclones got off to a slow start, and then in the second and third rounds.

They have proven their resilience as improving as an individual tournament.

Cyclone Hockey honors seniors' legacy to program

By Kevin Hornerwwastatedaily.com

As the post-season approaches for the ISU men's hockey team, its focus is on one thing: Ty Danick.

Both Danick and his teammates understand the role Ty plays for the team this season. The senior forward has been a mainstay on the Cyclone bench for the past three seasons, and his leadership and work ethic have been a major reason for the team's success.

"Ty's been a great player for us," said head coach Loren Gabel. "He just plays one of those positions that you don't want to see a team lose."

These relationships that he has built up over the past three seasons will be key to the team's success this season.

With the start of the season just around the corner, the team is focused on getting ready for the challenges that lie ahead. The coaching staff is working hard to make sure that the team is prepared for the upcoming games.

"We're really excited to get back on the ice," said Ty. "We've got a lot of new faces this year, but I think we're going to do some good things."
RANKING #4

There are many sources to the AMS programs that make ISU a top-seven university for apparel, merchandising, design, and production.

Sarah Bennett, director of apparel, events and hospitality management, called the programs as well as oversee the Fashion Show. She said the supplemental classes students are required to take if participating in the show.

Bennett said the Fashion Show is one of the many areas that make ISU an attractive place for students.

ISU students are not only learning about their major area of study, but also all other areas of the industry. In the fashion industry, students are often faced with an unknown discipline.

Bennett also said it is important to attribute a small amount of time for students to know about merchandising, design, and product development for any position one may be seeking.

A well-rounded education is great when applying for future jobs. Students in the apparel program also have the opportunity to gain work experience in various jobs. From digital printing to apparel, students get to learn all different types of skills.

“Students who are interested in going out and having an opportunity to work in the industry should take advantage of. One of the many courses offered in the fashion industry is fashion show,” Hueser said. The fashion show is one of the largest student-run events on campus.

Students are required to take the event to place during the spring semester. She said she would be willing to take it if the event was not held.

However, she said the event would take place in the fall if it were not held.

“April is after spring. April is right before classes. That is when students are usually too busy to have that much fun. Students will know what they need to work on and will be more excited for the event in April,” Dan Breitbarth, who is the director of the apparel program, said. When a student completes a course, they are almost ready to leave the university and are ready to start graduate school. The fashion show is one of the many opportunities students can take advantage of.

When asked how they plan to keep the event going, Loomis said she wants the students to be involved. Loomis said the event is more than just another event; it is an opportunity for students to take the lead of studying abroad. Iowa State also offers field study trips for students. On a field study, students get the opportunity to visit a city like New York and Los Angeles and tour different apparel companies and firms. The advisors and professors of the college lead the field study trips. For the students, there are many opportunities to go on field trips,
