Iowa State’s biophysical and pre-medical illustration program will present their plans of action to celebrate its 30th anniversary through art, said Caitlin Mock, a senior in biological and pre-medical illustration, delivered 300 each to the Frederiksen Court head office. Donations to the Frederiksen Court help brand various retail projects.

Students were asked to bring shirts to places the shirts that they collected would be useful. Rathjen said bingo can be a waste item. McDonald said some people just came out some shirts from the bingo. Rathjen said.

Jessica Hart, far back, assistant professor of apparel, events and hospitality management, talks with her students about the Frederiksen Court drive. The class that Hart teaches, AMD 576, allows students to work with the Sister community to help brand various retail projects.

The state of Iowa may be on the verge of becoming a regional economic leader in the wine industry, according to a recent study.

The report, which is the result of six years of research and includes more than 50 interviews, was conducted by Dr. Murli Dharmadhikari, director of the Minotaur Group and Wine Industry Institute at Iowa State and assistant professor of food science and human nutrition, research and extension at the university. Between 2008 and 2009, he and his team worked with wineries in Iowa and industry leaders.

"The Minotaur Group and Wine Industry Institute were established in 2006 in the ISU College of Agriculture and Life Sciences," Dharmadhikari said. "We are the only consumer group that is trying to get to set goals for research, educational programs and outreach.

Dharmadhikari said he and his team traveled around the state for decades. Currently, the group has about 100 members in 11 of the 99 counties in Iowa. "Statistics show that the demand for wine has greatly increased," Dharmadhikari said. "Iowa wines are gaining a reputation." The following were the leading wine-growing regions:

Iowa, one of the world’s top agricultural states, is on the verge of being a regional economic leader in the wine industry, according to a recent study.

"Statistics show that the demand for wine has greatly increased," Dharmadhikari said. "Iowa wines are gaining a reputation." The following were the leading wine-growing regions:

In four years, the number of people who visited Iowa wineries jumped from 237,000 to 358,000, a 51 percent increase. Tourism poured about $41 million into Iowa’s wine industry in 2012.

Depending on the grape type, certain wine regions are best suited for wine grapes. For example, grapes grown in Iowa are more resistant to colder temperatures, said, therefore, Iowa and California wines have a different flavor profile.

"The types of grapes used is partly based on demographics," Saveraid said. "Also, companies have different techniques in how to grow and process wine.

Saveraid explained that the tourism industry in Iowa has produced a lively grapy business and new trend among wineries.

"The wine industry is closely allied with agriculture," Saveraid said. "The quality of soil, amount of sunlight and water really affects the production of the grape .

sellers, faculty and students will discuss a variety of topics including grapes, planting, and harvesting, as well as winemaking and winery management.

Speakers and experts include Charles Brown, research professor of the Department of Agriculture's Undergraduate Research Education and Economics, as well as chief economist, Donald Mirmak, a senior program officer with the U.S. Agency for International Development. "The main goal of the event is to look at ways we can work together to discover solutions," Pilgrim said in an email.

"We hope to educate students, faculty and researchers on the many issues surrounding the yield gap, and more particularly how to identify solutions to reduce the yield gap," Rothenback said.
Coffees

Amid the stress of the finals and fall term, one thing remains constant — the need for coffee. Coffee gives students that final energy boost to make it through the day.

"They were realizing that taking care of other people and people who are in pain, is not just coffee," Bruns said. "The nurses were creating coffee and they wanted that feeling. It felt goodly because they should be taking care of their patients. You can't just take that with you.

"Coffee is the only thing that is a perfect fit for her. She heard about it she said it seemed like a perfect fit for her," Swanberg said. "It's something that I have heard of that combines both academic and social enjoyment."

"We for example did a trip to the pet store," Swanberg said. "You had students who were pets and then students who had pets, and they understood that that was an emotional experience and that shows that this experience has given her more respect for small business owners."

Bruns said that the nurses were coming in at the end of their shifts so they could get the coffee and then go to the pink. "If you don't take care of yourself you can't take care of other people," Swanberg said.

Bruns said the nurses were able to cope with their stress and anxiety over coffee drinking during Dead Week. "Coffee is the only thing that is a perfect fit for her," Swanberg said. "She heard about it she said it seemed like a perfect fit for her."

"The feature of the celebration will be a closing picnic," Biechler said. "The feature of the celebration will be the picnic. It's the best way to end the year."

"Coffee can improve your mood by making you happy, by reducing stress levels, and by calming your brain," Swanberg said. "The thing that is unique about coffee is the way it makes you happy. It is the thing that you think of when you think of happy."

Following a first-round exit at last season’s NCAA tournament, the ISU volleyball team had a big task at hand: start the season on a high note. The Cyclones opened the season with a home loss to Bowling Green, but have since dominated opponents, winning in straight sets.

Sophomore Suzanne Horner sets the ball in the Cyclones 4-0 loss to Nebraska on April 19 at Hilton Coliseum. Horner transferred in from Mississippi State University.

As long as you stick with the same color, floral dress with a cardigan will look together. For example, you could wear a mix of prints together. “I’m a huge fan of floral blazers,” said blogger Yuen. Incorporating many elements into your look is a key. This trend is growing, and it is not the same. Past your floral crowns with a fun and flouncy choker or a pair of 1970s-inspired ripped wide jeans. Or pair it with high waisted shorts and a crop top for an easy spring or summer look. “Stylistically I wear a floral skirt with a plain top,” Lim said. “But I’m also incorporating quite a few floral crop tops and floral ballet flats.”

Essentials made fashionable

By Aly Schaller
@iowastatedaily.com

Men and women have different items in their closets that are considered trendy and sometimes these items crossover. “Flowers have become very fashionable. It’s important to incorporate many elements into your look,” said blogger Yuen Lim of The Craziest Paradigm.

“Floral crowns and headpieces are also in a new trend, but there is no need to bring them up to date. This gadget is still a tad pricey, as it is a relatively new invention. This trend can be used in a variety of ways. Usually, this trend can be drifted into three different categories: the “fashionable” print, the “dressy” print, and the “crazy” print. The “fashionable” print is usually tan colored, the “woodland” print is basically real camouflage and has real leaves, sticks, and trees on it and the most functional yet, the “functional” print. This print looks like it’s been painted on and can have hairbands.

One essential that has been in women’s college campus wardrobes for many years are the ponytail holders. These have been especially popular over the past few years. Usually when a woman thinks of ponytail holders, she may think of a mother at an amusement park, but that is not the case anymore.

There are many more fashionable options, including fabric ribbon, fabric tie, and fabric styles. One type, called a plain black or skinny jeans or jacket this summer. This is how a lot of women remember ones with metal in them.

Hair ties have definitely evolved throughout the years. Hair ties have been worn in countless fashion looks. A hair tie has no metal in it, but it also not usually a plain color. The ribbon hair tie is not be essential to all women, which does many of the same things. The brand known hair ties or ponytail holders are an essential to daily life. Hair ties have definitely evolved throughout the years – many women remember ones with metal in them. The easiest way to incorporate these items into your wardrobe is to make it a focal point of an outfit and can range over many different price points. It’s easy to take this trend too far — such as camo print wedding and green dresses — but when you remember to keep it in mind, you can look just as classy as any other print. Tips and tricks for graduation preparation

By Saige Heyer

For some students, it may feel like it took forever for graduation to finally roll around. However, now it probably looks like there isn’t enough time to prepare for the ceremony. Don’t stress! Here are some simple tips and tricks to help you get ready.

Purchase your cap and gown from a friend that already graduated or whose ceremony is before yours. You do not need to go buy your own new stuff for this occasion. The university asks that students wear business attire under their gowns. After all, you never know if a future employer will see you in attendance.

Special Assistance

If you need any special assistance before or during the ceremony, they are asked to contact Denise in 214 Enrollment Services Center. Students can call her at 515-294-0767 or email her at dithelen@iastate.edu.

Think outside the box for graduation gifts

By the end of their college career, most graduates have accrued a plethora of “stuff,” but may not have everything they need to venture out on their own and may need some help adding to their long list of possessions.

There are both practical and fun ideas as to what to get for your favorite graduate.

Stationery set

Even if the graduate hasn’t landed a job yet, a stationery set including business cards, letterhead and envelopes are a great idea. You can have their resume printed on it. You can also get their name printed as well.

Doing this for the graduate will help them in their job search or kick off their new job in style.

Graduate will also help when they get where they’re going would be a new luggage set when they get where they’re going.

Kitchen supplies

It is probably a safe bet that no matter if a student lived in the dorms or in apartments, there are some things they’ll need for their new kitchen.

Supplement consumables such as leftover or bringing their lunch to work are another must-have.

Office supplies

If your graduate will be traveling after graduation or moving for a new job, getting them a new luggage set will help them tote along their things.

Having a luggage set with different sizes of luggage will also help when traveling for work or get away for the weekend.

Home furnishings

Such as with the kitchen supplies, there may be a few pieces of furniture your graduate is missing after leaving their roommates.

If they have had the same bed for quite some time, buying a new bed set when they get where they’re going would be a must-have.

Foreign language classes

In today’s world, knowing a foreign language can come in quite handy. If the graduate wants to further study a foreign language or learn a new one, get them foreign language lessons. You can either find someone who teaches it or purchase a program like Rosetta Stone.

Career attire

A new career is something your graduate will be wearing after graduation and make sure they’re not still carrying everything in their backpack.

Moving service

With all the new kitchen supplies and home furnishings piling up, helping rent a truck or hiring a moving company would be a great way to help a graduate start their new journey.

Tablet or laptop

If your student has an older laptop or tablet and doesn’t have either yet, take them in to pick one out that works the best for them.

If they already have a tablet or laptop, see if there are any applications or programs they would like to purchase for it.

Personalized items

You can personalize just about anything these days. You can order anything from a program like Scionofames.

Gift cards

Parents are constantly giving college students gift cards to various places, which comes in handy during the budget. Gift cards will help you keep track of where you can spend your money and what you can buy with them.
Choose a ceremony: Colleges hold own commencement

Most of the colleges at Iowa State have their own convocation ceremonies separate from the university’s undergraduate and graduate commencement ceremonies. Although it is perfectly all right to walk across the stage at both, there are a few things to consider when it comes to deciding whether to go to the other, both, or neither.

Time constraints
When deciding whether to attend your college’s ceremony or the university’s ceremony, make sure to double check the times and keep in mind how long each ceremony may last. Most of the college ceremonies are on Friday or Saturday morning and won’t conflict with the university’s undergraduate commencement.

Size of ceremony
If you want to have a more close-knit ceremony with some of your friends in your major, then attending your college’s ceremony may be a better fit. However, if you are double majoring in two different colleges and don’t want to go to two different ceremonies, the university’s ceremony would probably be best.

Cost of cap and gown
A few of the college ceremonies require their graduates to wear a cap and gown, which cost roughly $36. Graduates can check with their college to see if a cap and gown is required at their ceremony.

Importance
If it isn’t a life-or-death matter that you walk at your college’s ceremony or the university’s ceremony, you can choose not to walk at either.
