Bach’s ’Double Concerto’

Bessie Spratt*

*Iowa State College

Copyright ©1936 by the authors. Sketch is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress).
http://lib.dr.iastate.edu/sketch
Bach's "Double Concerto"

By Bessie Spratt, '37

CALMER than sleeping, soothing to rest,
A quiet beauty lulling us, lest,
Careworn and heavy, we break from the strain
Of dragging the clanking, burdensome chain
Of duty and effort—
Our life's refrain.

Yes, Mr. Tunis,
College IS Worth While

By Walter Greenwood Barlow, '38

ASKING the question in the title of his book, "Was College Worth While?" John R. Tunis extends his analysis of the Harvard class of 1911 over 230 pages, winding up with an answer which is decidedly negative. It is the custom at Harvard for the secretary of each class to gather together a Twenty-fifth Anniversary Report, which contains, as completely as possible, the records of the progress made by the class during the twenty-five years since the time of its graduation. Mr. Tunis, having studied the report for the class of '11, gives what he believes to be concrete evidence for assuming that the four years spent by the 541 men in the class were not justified.

On the face of it, the evidence supports the author's conviction; for the collective success of the 541 men has not been what one might expect of a choice section from the educated fraction of the populace. In his own words, Mr. Tunis says, "We had a higher education. From that segment should come the