Vitamin A deficiency may cause death loss with no characteristic symptoms. It is supplied by fresh green feeds, yellow corn, alfalfa meal, freshly fed cod-liver oil or sardine oil. The ration which is made up of 50 per cent of yellow corn and 5 to 8 per cent of alfalfa meal does not contain sufficient vitamin A and it must be supplemented with fresh green feed.

Suspensions of phenothiazole syringed into the throat is named as the right sort of “gargle” for pharyngitis and laryngitis. In human medicine it is one of the drugs of choice in that role.

Differential Diagnosis

The first essential in the treatment of sickness in pigs is to determine the cause. There are many diseases affecting pigs, and the Veterinarian, because of his education, training, and experience, is the only one qualified to make a differential Diagnosis and administer proper treatment. Anti-Hog Cholera Serum is to be used for the prevention of Hog-Cholera only, and will not immunize against other diseases.
