ethos: What is the drunkest thing you’ve ever seen, heard, or smelled on the bus?
Meyer: This one guy got on and went straight to the back of the bus. He had the red [vomit] bucket sitting on his lap, and he was eating pizza at the same time. And then he...
ethos: No, he didn’t!
Meyer: Yeah, he dropped his pizza in the bucket and then picked it back out and ate it again.

ethos: When you’re off duty, do you still feel the urge to pick up drunks and drive them to their desired locations?
Meyer: (Laughing) Nope, I don’t.

ethos: Do you ever get any dates on the drunk bus?
Meyer: I get a lot of drunk “I love you’s,” but you know, they're drunk. Once a girl asked me if I had a girlfriend and if I had told her no—I think I would have had a date. I think the best compliment I’ve ever gotten was when I was told I was the best OWI-saver in the world.

ethos: One last question: Can I drive the bus?
Meyer: Definitely not.

ethos: What is it like to be the second-winningest Iowa State soccer coach in history? Do you sign a lot of autographs?
Hornbacher: No, it’s all about the players. They give all the autographs.

ethos: What do you yell at the girls the most?
Hornbacher: I bet the girls could better answer that! When the intensity is low, I tell them to "Raise the bar!" or I say, "This isn’t good enough!"

ethos: How many balls would you say you’ve kicked in your lifetime?
Hornbacher: Well, I’ve played for 24 years. (Pause) I would say 100,000.

ethos: You were a goalkeeper. Which of your players do you think could score on you?
Hornbacher: I think the entire team could! I’m retired. I’ve hung up my cleats. Kristina Bowman definitely could. She’s got a powerful left and right shot.
