Things I want you (my ex-husband) to tell your male friends...
"I stop somewhere waiting for you"
On the way
Recluse
Closing time
Disembody
Massage
The mommy design
Uncaging the silent word Park of my childhood

There are the double oversized swings where my father used to give me and my older brother underdogs pushing and pushing and finally running under as we towered above for a second

There
is the old fire engine we used to crawl on and through and fight over who was going to get to drive And the tornado slide painted in red and gold we climbed repeatedly waiting in line at a steep slant and if we were alone we would scream
on the way down our noise reverberating in our chests

There
we are at the picnic table there and there and there It seems we ate at all of them Cokes fizzling in their plastic cups the best part of the meal Mom's fried chicken wrapped in kitchen dish towels still warm as we bit into it And there we are and we're laughing Awakening

I unlocked the door to what I expected to be my mother's angry face surprised by blood tears, breath--the sour smell of beer, a smell I once had liked.

As an offering,
I handed her a wet washcloth but reclaimed it from her motionless hand and scrubbed her bloody face as though she was the child not the mother.

Face dark as a mask body drawn in he came around the corner as though nothing was wrong took over my work:

Go to bed.
I'll take care of it.

Sitting next to him in bed the night light, spotlight the blue comforter hiding everything, she didn't say good night, her face beginning to swell.

I climbed to my room, peeked in at my siblings...somehow sleeping sat on my bed, listening.
Reading the body

I follow
the bruises on my body I memorize size shape color

Pink Minnie Mouse pajamas covered my small form as I watched them fight I was hypnotized by their actions until my father's fist in flight bound towards my mother grazed me

She loved him like an addiction She couldn't get enough called him at work two or three times a day just to say hello just to hear his voice bore the bruises because she only wanted him

He wanted the noise
to stop Her voice demanding in his ear Everything was never enough Never enough of his time Never enough
of him
All he knew how to do was thrust out

Out of the door out of the house where violence kept us into adulthood
I escaped

Escaped
into flesh fascination I'm obsessed with all that is marred
The steppingstone

The red square back VW warm honey in my mouth from the jar that had broken as we played in the space over the engine.
The smell cooked into the car.
The penny hot in my sticky child hand
a reward for being quiet.
We drove to the lake our small family
just a mother, father, son, and me.
We arrived, climbed over endless mirror families smelling like coconut and sweat, claimed our territory with a ratty plaid blanket, and moved towards the brown surface alive with masses of green we avoided.
I feared it wrapping around my legs
and growing on me.
We attempted to cool ourselves in the warm water.
I watched as green dots spread on my yellow swim suit.
My mother called me away from the couple whose faces were pressed together their bodies obviously entangled.
I tried to open my eyes under the water but couldn't see anything.
And then the moment:
my father back from the raft
too far off for me to swim to, resplendent in cut off swim trunks, lifted me high in the air and let go.
I was flying and free until I hit the murky brown water
again.
"She'll never be happy"

I hear the words and do not feel that they belong to me I'm surprised to find they are the sign someone wants to hang around my neck.

Happiness is the possession I'm always buying Its value I learned as a child my mother with her bent nose purpled lip and blackened eye was the teacher.

Year after year she burdened it would not change, could not change the cycle of violence looked to the next year as though it held the end of it, of him or of her.

As all children believe, I knew I was going to be better than my parents knew how to do it right I learned to grow wings and flight became my birthright.

I never stay long enough to be wounded I vanish before the slaps the punches the kicks I vanish at venomous words I purchase the easy things the quick fixes and cheap highs available for escape
I never get too close to anyone I am not chained as my mother was chained And now they say
I'm just like her.
My heritage

As my husband slams me into the bathroom door, I look into his face and see my father with his rage directed into black eyes broken noses cuts above the eyebrow on the billboard face of my mother.
I feel the circle closing inside of me.
The destiny
I feared holding my throat wanting to strike me, gouge me,
break me,
with the hands of my husband.
I feel these very hands, the ones
that have caressed me, soothed me,
saved me,
taken care of me
and these are my father's hands, and the rescue was not a rescue at all.
I will never be able to hold your hand again

The lined loveliness of it the long delicate fingers with rounded nails the brown hairs leading to your wrist

Its secrets are silent except
It and I know the way it can fly through the air and strike the buzz of a voice Escapee

Blown out of the house by a dark rage I learned to live outdoors Stealing matches
I mastered fire setting weeds to flame learning to control what burned
I made a clay oven practiced future meals by forming mud patties so perfect and smooth I wanted to eat them I dug out old potatoes from the garden hiding them away with my provisions stolen bits of candy a bag of sunflower seeds my favorite doll

I planned to steal fresh food the night I escaped all of my family asleep and me gone I knew where I would run an abandoned house down the road trees thickly protecting it I could travel there on foot through a cornfield the stalks guiding my path I could live there the screaming left behind

Now as I drive by the shack I see her dash for cover from my knowing eyes She is free and still alive
I go to my parents
I embrace them
We all pretend their little girl never ran away Pulse

I count the clocks in my grandparents' house six per room the constant ticking a background noise to the rhythm of their voices my grandmother repeating herself like the clocks chiming a weight to the air a heavy hand pressed to my chest resting on my body counting the dying moments My grandma's purse

Tucked in the folds of your lap I saw my reflection in the black plastic leather, leaned against your plush breasts cushion-like
As your hand of down dug it its caves for bits of spearmint chewing gum for me to munch discovered butterscotch hard candies that you and I rolled on our tongues
    as we giggled over pictures of my father as a baby and you as a young woman hopeful, eager to jump off the page shook your change purse clinking with pennies, nickels, even a few dimes reminding me of treats later at the Ben Franklin pulled out colored scarves like a magician red, fuchsia, yellow to wear in your hair the colors dancing over my grasping fingers they smelled like you that glorious smell of sweet lilacs mixed with powder

Now
as I hold this purse
in my grown hands, I open its depths and look for you and me inside.
Bloodline

I stare at my grandfather's wedding photograph image half grin
his eyes meeting the camera lens gentle upward slick of his hair away from his pale forehead.
It's there.
Hidden behind gray double breasted suit dotted tie flared as he presses into my grandmother,
a young woman.
Her timid smile
with its slightly crooked teeth reveals the truths.
The gentle trusting eyes looking off slightly to the left share the visions locked within her.
The sleeves of her dress long, the collar sealed with an ornate heart pin to hide the bruises already growing in flesh of new wife arms.
The break in the thin line of her dark eyebrow, a scar from his raised hand.
It is there between them.
The legacy
my father holds in his falling fist.
Breaking point

He had not intended for his fist to jerk out from his side finding contact with her jaw But her mouth would not stop running as he tried to focus on the TV and he had warned her twice Now he could not hear anything with her weeping in the corner It added to the chorus of the day all the voices picking at him his kids, his co-workers everyone and then her and he could do something about her her flesh gave so easily to his force In a way he felt better even with her crying He knew she would heal like all the times before Elegy for an aunt unknown

The night after your sister took the brand new kitchen knife her husband had just given her and slashed her wrists and throat in the basement shower you awake to her at the foot of your bed as if somehow your eyes had lifted her out of the white floral wallpaper Her gashes gone
Her mouth whispers explanations

I am growing inside of you at his death never to know my aunt Marilyn You press your hand to me and understand what your Catholic parents cannot The baby that died while inside of her so far along she had to give birth to death No matter that she had two other children a husband and another baby after the loss no matter how much life there was there was still only death eating it all away

You forgive
what your family and church will not forgive You release her from the trap of ideology and Catholic guilt You understand that life is only separated from death moment by moment by belief and by this you know you do not mean in a god As she disappears with your thoughts you curl back down into sleep
feel the baby move inside of you wait for your husband to come home from the army and believe Acceptance

Sex was my mother and my father the unconditional approval I sought all packed into a "man" of 16 and yeah he'd accept me if he could fuck me and since sex raised me I'm still 14 caught under that adolescent boy every time still whispering no as I do everything that says yes and hoping that this time it has something to do with love
The lesson

The creak of the porch brought my eyes around I nibbled on a ratty pigtail and peeked through the window to you baby sitter.

Black moonlight licked at your hair
I watched as he caressed your shoulder your shivers
the way you pressed your lips to his throat drawing the life out of him, into him through you
the thigh against thigh bone into bone the small groans of pleasure.

I watched you like TV better than strawberry ice cream better than coloring in my books better than making the Barbie dolls do it (that came later of course) You,
center stage,
performed.
Rooting out

She came to him to have flesh purpled and browned in dying flower by thrusts into wall rigid and unrelenting

She wanted the hairs on her head pulled tight as fine strings music rattling through head and teeth finding rhythm

She desired teeth breaking at ripe skin of neck taut and flowing gnashing redness

She longed for him to rip inside of her pressing deeper deeper still but never deep enough

Later
in naked silence of cold bathroom bulb light she would account for marks tightness of muscles extended too far burning between her legs but everywhere pain still unexcavated Trappings

He presses the coat firmly to his chest.
It's his.
He likes the feel of the fabric her skin presses against him.
    will not give it up
    never take it off

He adjusts the hat at an angle then he tries another.
He likes the way it crowns his head her ringlets frame his face.
    will not give it up

He smoothes the pants.
He checks this side then the other.
He likes the line on the legs her black stockings straight on him.
    will not give it up

He checks the gleam on the shoes.
The black patent leather crackles.
He likes the way it shines her eyes gleam up at him.
    will not give it up

He smoothes the gloves to his hands.
He corrects each digit.
He likes the efficiency of the look her fingers stroke his palm
will not give it up

He glances at the mirror.
He sees an image there her face looks back at him.
He will not give it up.
He'll never take it off.
Doll

Transformation

As she removes her clothes for another stranger She feels her lips hardening open her hair attaching itself around her face yellow coloring as her head becomes rubber her arms and legs grow light rising out ever ready for any embrace her breasts growing nipples enlarging almost plastic like her belly flat her vagina becoming a particularly thick layer of rubber ready for any use any size
all the rest of her disappearing replaced by simple air
perfectly fuckable
The possibilities

She can press her arms above her head
she can wrap her legs around him she can be taken from behind
she can give him head it's perfect--no teeth she'll do anything look she's becoming a pretzel beautiful She'll do it standing up sitting down upside down with him and his friends She's not particular she doesn't care she won't complain or scream for help or grow tired or dry She won't want to use protection call it rape tell him she loves him She'll last as long as he can keep it up hell she'll last longer she's always available she never has a period she can fuck 365 days a year 24 hours a day if she pops she can be replaced

The act

He presses his penis into her rubber vagina thrusting and thrusting squashing her into the bed takes this inanimate thing and fucks it fucks it fucks it the sounds of pleasure mute except for the squeaking like rubbing a balloon the gentle hiss as the unnoticed air is fucked out of it Previous dried sperm peeling from puckering skin he comes and pushes it away withered plastic and spit the discarded sex doll falls to the side mouth open in a perpetual oh Sacrament

As she moves through the people-filled sidewalk her body aches from the sexual positions it discovered with a stranger the night before she can feel the imprint of hip bones into hip bones she can feel her arms ache from being pinned above her head she knows she stinks of sex The raindrops pelt her with a sense of baptismal obligation She falls to her knees a puddle extends before her yielding her reflection marred with the grains of the storm her sins all rejected by the sky
She presses her face down chin to chin she kisses
all of her flaws Her lips wet with the anointing she stands up and walks forward dripping Flesh revelations

I'm doing sex
like a fix sniffing it off the car seat or bed hell I'll do it off the bathroom sink just tell me where to put my leg I'll take this injection deep and hate my dealer as I worship him

I'll spin out of control on this trip pressed in lycra
and jeans so tight they sing into my thighs deciding which man should join my high slip into his car with practiced ease go to a place I've never been or never left

Afterwards
I'm left useless on the floor overdosed bared
to myself Learning to believe

I will wear the holy cloths and press my face into my hands for redemption.

I will be the vestal virgin throwing off this skin of the Mary Magdaline.
I will find a new religion.
I will name it "my self."

My prayers will be cunt and breast.
I memorize skin.
I will learn again cock and balls.
I'll know how to fondle.
I'll know how to wrap tongue.
I'll whisper the commandments of the flesh, as I gently drag my tongue across your chest.

Serpentine, I will wrap myself around you.
Here, in our Eden of smells and liquids, I will cast off my former self, be anyone you wish to make me.
Just tell me what to be:
the whore, the virgin, the mistress.

We can fall to our knees and practice derelictions.
and practice everything we've ever been taught.

I'll put the hymnal here between us.
We will remember the words that bind.
We will hum them under our breath as our fingers trace the holy objects.

Come lock your fingers with mine.
We will say the vows that only ever really matter.
The vows of pleasure the vows of flesh that vows that always bind you to the person you touch.
Hostess

I enter the shack
I live in.
Dirty tile floors
show what is missing by the holes in the dust.
All my belongings stolen except the answering machine clicking in the corner and the VCR.
They didn't seem to want anything that would record, though they took all the poems, the pencils, and the paper.
My search for the perpetrators leads me to a party populated by faces
drawn from my past.
They've all just dosed on acid.
I know they are tripping on my couch and TV I know they are smoking away each book of poetry with every pass of the pot pipe.
This party is on me,
and they laugh
when I protest.
Consuming

You are taking the breath from my mouth snatching it up with your fingers and eating it with delicate bites.

You are taking the ideas from my head prying them out with your voice and stuffing them into your pockets.

You are taking the warmth from my body lifting it away like a shawl with your eyes and absorbing it into your being.

You are taking the blood from my veins sucking it out through my finger tips with your mouth and licking it from your lips.

You are taking the bones from under my skin prying them out from the canopy with your hands and licking each one clean.
Mute

put the razor blade down your weapon you vanquish
My fingers move to my back come away confused with blood You've carved messages on my back again
It's the way you've always communicated It's indecipherable My fingers cannot read the gashes
I grope in blindness
I never understand
I give up on this on us the wounds heal vivid vines of scars marking me my fingers memorize the ridges my mind
tries to give them text I'm determined to someday make a language out of this Demarcation tattoo

You wrote into my body.
I have always been affected by what is written.
With each press of the tattoo needle into the white of my hip my body sucked in your ink parched.
It released nothing.
Like after our sex when it drank of your sperm
so that none escaped.

Here too
was our half communion.
A ritual passing of fluid.
It is visible.
You inside of me
rising out
through the skin.
I can no longer
contain it.
Your miser motions marking where you end and I begin.
Dark

The street light stands a sentry in my yard as I crawl across the grass toward the safety of the empty house.

I want to hide, between the cracks in the boards eat dust and mildew to survive But the moon illuminates my breath the trees record my every movement in their branches So I shall remain frozen on the yard to escape from you.
Things I want you (my ex-husband) to tell your male friends...

You know the ones who think I'm a bitch the ones you've trained to imagine me as slut cunt emasculating wench Those friends of yours-- tell them to imagine what it feels like to have someone say 90 lbs heavier than they are slam them around their own apartments the places they consider to be retreats safe harbors theirs
tell them they are absolutely powerless and can do nothing but wait for the assault to finish until this attacker decides it's time to go tell them this person is someone they married someone who tells them they're selfish that their identities are wrapped up in sex-- to reinforce it grab their balls and squeeze say without these they're nothing This continues for the entire night this continues into the next day this continues for a year but no one will believe them no one cares tell them this and then they'll know who I am Hello
Walt
it’s a pleasure to meet you let’s walk through this cornfield You can tell me of the beauty of life of nature of the self
We will weave daisies of delusion in my hair and your beard for I don’t believe you, Walt Whitman.
The world is an ugly place to me right now and my self—the one I almost lost to him—is a dirty empty closet I live in.
I feel no happiness in grass in animals I feel the echo of a door clicking shut the bitterness of distrust on my tongue
the loneliness of an unoccupied apartment the ability to simply swim through time without touching it, affecting it just pushing it away like water.
Walt,
I want to believe you but can't I'm too busy drowning in this self of mine.
On the way

You find death in bus terminal after bus terminal waiting in each corner lingering on green plastic seats stained and broken whispering from dirt streaked floors

You know everything is dead as you are brought closer closer to the body by this metal box moving over the time road You can't get there any faster but you are already too late

You're whispering good-bye to strangers
As if they would understand You ask the lady next to you for one more moment but she cannot give it Recluse

I know the walls of this apartment better than I know anything I can tell you about the cracks all the holes and that dark mark that runs down the wall that has been there longer than I've been here I often wonder how it got there I also know these stains in the carpet there are exactly sixteen of them dark like birthmarks on pale skin
They form a path

I can tell you about television its voices fill these walls without them I hear every car's tires crunching the bricks on the road outside and the click click of a woman's heels on the sidewalk and the angry rhythm of these city dwelling cicadas Every noise roots in my head

I watch the news
four times a day punctuation for my programs Capital comma comma period I always end the day with the 11 o'clock report

I do all of these things but I cannot turn the handle on the door I never want to walk down the front steps of this building
It hurts me to leave and go get groceries I'll make do with this loaf of bread for as long as I can and water is just as good as milk Sometimes I forget to eat

As I sit alone and listen my neighbors' noises creep into my apartment I hear their televisions I hear my programs
And though I never see these people I know I'm not alone
Closing time

My life has become a waiting a pause between moments pressed in corners of silence letting time slide through my fingers every granule counted.

I am the hands on the clock feel each second ticking through me ring out at the hour announce the new one.

I change with the trees shedding their clothes of white for green green for brown always desiring adornment.

I count under my breath every passing the sun setting again another Tuesday
a holiday ending.
I move time this way picking it up from the pile on my right setting it down in the pile on my left.

I occupy the spaces on a calendar I fill in each box reaching into the next moving week by week closer to you.
Disembody

pieces raining onto my lap white chemical dust collecting on my fingers as I dissect the Polaroid with my small sewing scissors

each thin length the shard
of a mirror

slivers of a body fall away

I see what it is like to cut the naked self to bits

can look at this photograph and feel no connection with it

who is this woman draped across the water bed toes curled around the edge skin so pale it radiates up from black sheets as if floating

who would let anyone see her this way

who would let someone capture her on quick action film

who would wait and then laugh and then pause as the outline of her body became discernible then filled in it didn't show her at all just the husk of me Massage

Fingers dig into flesh excavating skin to press into muscle ease out tightness I watch two couples caressing each other public intimacy at the poetry reading
I don't hear it
I'm too busy
listening to bodies crying out My eyes are watching white hands kneading brown shoulder blades and tightened fingers raking on a red haired scalp

My body relaxes with theirs
leans forward wanting something that connection that touching How even here
I want it how I've always wanted it hungered to be held caressed how I've looked into so many eyes and every part of me except my voice was asking calling begging for someone to fill that original untouched need left there an empty hole by my mother's unmoving hands

I rename all of my dolls Annette
after you and plant them in bed with me so their pale plastic feet touch my feet thighs arms shoulders and head.
I am in the middle of Annette
the center of your world, finally,
Mommy.

"Being silenced is something women--regardless of ethnicity, clan, or color--know only too well." -Marcia Ann Gillespie

Arms wrapped around her knees in fetal position, she never stopped whispering. Her mouth created pictures of a bird so beautiful:

You could see each red feather stroking the other, your grandmother brushing your hair.
You could hear its song curl into your ear, natural as your mother's heartbeat.
You could feel the air open as it takes wing, a welcome from a sister.

Her images were of such beauty that they caused discontent from minds that could not know flight.

They stuffed her in a box to shut her up, but the cardboard could not contain her words, and the bird flew around the box to keep her company.

They drowned out her noise with music, but her voice became the beat that kept time in their ears, and the bird's song was the melody.

They sewed her mouth shut with the coarse thread of ignorance, then her hands began to speak.
The bird was more beautiful than ever.
