We’ve all had our good and bad nights, but honey, you two were on that pole together, popping, locking and dropping together until you escaped the careful watch of your friends and slipped off into the night. Next time, consider those with sensitive gag reflexes before you take those Jaeger bombs.

EXHIBITIONISTS

You know who you are.

You young ladies who had one shot too many and consider yourselves cuddly drunks. You young men who just can’t wait for the Moonlight Express to whisk the two of you home to privacy. You are the violators of the unspoken rules of PDA, public displays of affection. Find out where you and your significant other are on this scale – then take it down a notch or pump up the heat!

SMITTEN KITTENS

You two are the innocent ones. You’re shy to be seen looking too deep into each other’s eyes and definitely avoid public physical contact. It might be the beginning of your relationship, but the sexual tension is growing. Holding hands is no problem here and perhaps a shy peck behind a tree when no one is around. You keep it discreet and classy, even in the bars where you are more social drinkers than party rockers.

OLD MARRIED COUPLE SYNDROME (OMCS)

Known as the committed couple, you’ve been together since high school and are still going strong, even finishing each other’s sentences. You’re confident enough in your relationship to leave the affections at home and your single friends appreciate that you don’t rub it in their faces. The hands have moved from holding each other, to a wrap around the waist. Perhaps he cannot stand to have you away from him or she just loves feeling the rippling muscles under your shirt. Be careful you two don’t look attached at the hip – a little independence never hurt anyone.
