With this issue we are initiating a procedure in which we will feature classes of alumni of the Division of Veterinary Medicine, Iowa State College. It is our hope to continue this innovation in succeeding issues of this publication. As an addition of possible interest, we are including the most recent addresses that we have on file of all the members of each class featured.

Considering the limited amount of time that we were able to allot between the date we mailed the letters of request for information and the deadline we stated for submission of the material, the response to our first letters was encouraging. In future letters, we plan to include a form sheet that will list the type of material that seems to be of greatest interest to former classmates. This we feel will encourage greater response and bring uniformity to the information concerning each alumnus.

DEATHS

Dr. E. M. Austin, '18, died February 19, 1951. He had been living in Los Angeles, California.

Dr. Richard Barrett Holst, '51, died at his home in Ames on December 12, 1952 following a heart attack. He had practiced veterinary medicine in Williams and Ames since 1951 and had previously served for 10 years as a Lieutenant Colonel in the Field Artillery.

Survivors include his wife, the former Lucille Penfield, '30, a son, Barry, stationed with the Navy at Camp Elliott, California, and a daughter, Karla.

Dr. Burton R. Rogers, '99, died December 20, 1952, in Los Angeles, California. He had lived in California since 1943.

Dr. Rogers was on the staff of the Bureau of Animal Industry as a meat inspector. From 1906 to 1914 he was on the veterinary faculty at Kansas State College, and for several years he was dean of the now discontinued St. Joseph Veterinary College.

Experiments indicate that Testosterone, when injected into the muscles, produced a feed saving of nearly 150 pounds for each 100 pounds of gain. This hormone had a more pronounced effect on steers than on heifers, resulting in daily gains of 2.7 and 2.5 pounds, respectively. Without hormones, the gains were 2.4 pounds daily for steers and 2 pounds for heifers.

Veterinary practitioners should make it a point to be cleaner and more careful in sterility work than the farmer, herdsman, or the inseminator.

State-Federal
Brucellosis Laboratory

The State-Federal Brucellosis Laboratory was opened in 1934 for the purpose of furnishing a single agency to supervise the agglutination testing of cattle under the cooperative State-Federal program for the control of brucellosis in cattle. Since 1934, over 2,300,000 tests on cattle have been processed in the laboratory. In addition to the tests on cattle, many brucellosis tests on other species of animals, especially swine, have been run.

The laboratory is run through the cooperation of the Iowa Department of Agriculture, the office of the State Veterinarian, the Iowa Veterinary Diagnostic Laboratory, and the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry. Since the opening of the laboratory in 1934, there has been a veterinarian as supervisor. At the present time, there are four technicians and a secretary to assist Dr. Wayne Yoder with the work of the laboratory.

In 1949, the laboratory assumed the responsibility for the private brucellosis testing work which, at that time, was being taken care of by the Iowa Veterinary Diagnostic Laboratory. Today both private and cooperative testing are taken care of in the one laboratory without charge to the practicing veterinarian. In addition to testing both private and cooperative samples for the practicing veterinarian, the State-Federal Brucellosis Laboratory will furnish, upon request, bleeding vials and shipping boxes to veterinarians who submit blood samples to the laboratory for testing.

Since the middle of January, 1953, the laboratory has been using the rapid plate test on all samples. This means that samples arriving at the laboratory in the morning are processed during the day, and the results are mailed back to the veterinarian the same day.

The estimated value of the fertility returned to the soil each year by livestock in this country is $3,000,000,000.
