Fifty-eight Men First to Graduate from College of Veterinary Medicine at ISU.

The College of Veterinary Medicine at Iowa State University will graduate 58 men on May 28. It has required an average of 6.8 years of college work for these men to receive a Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree.

The average age of the class is 26.3 years with a range of 22 to 36.

Twenty-two members of the class are veterans.

Seventy-six per cent of the class are married. Of the 44 members who are married, 34 have children. The largest family has four children and the total number of children is 57.

At the time of this writing, not all the members have made definite post-graduate plans. Most of those with incomplete plans indicate they would prefer a mixed or large animal practice. Twenty nine men are planning to go into mixed practice, eight into large animal practice, and seven into small animal practice. Two men are going to small animal internships. Five plan to go to the service, two into institutional work, and two into government work. Three members plan to establish their own practices when they graduate.

Nearly 50 per cent indicate they plan to remain in Iowa. Three each plan to go to Wisconsin and Illinois; two each to California, Nebraska, and South Dakota, and one each to Missouri, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and Indiana.
