Moth

Joseph C. Desy

Abstract

in her little hand she cupped the furry moth and curled her fingers slowly over it to keep it from flying away and she brought it close to her face and talked to it dearly as if she were talking to her own child a child that she had once wished for but never could have and after she spoke to it she picked it up gently by its wings closed her loving eyes and ate it...

in her little hand
she cupped the furry moth
and curled her fingers
slowly over it
to keep it
from flying away
and she brought it close to her face
and talked to it
dearly
as if she were talking to her own child
a child that she had once wished for
but never could have
and after she spoke to it
she picked it up
gently by its wings
closed her loving eyes
and ate it
