Answers To Large Animal Clinical Quiz

1. Several cases of this same type of copper poisoning have been diagnosed in Iowa. Often it is due to the overingest tion of CuSO₄ or field treatment products containing CuSO₄. However, cases have occurred in confined feeding operations in which the copper levels were fed as currently recommended but the molybdenum and sulfate levels were deficient. Molybdenum inhibits the uptake from the gut and storage of copper in the liver so that its deficiency allows an accumulation of copper in the liver making the animal susceptible to toxicity. For a more complete explanation and discussion of this syndrome and its pre-2. Bovine Spastic Paresis or Inherited Spastic Paresis of Cattle
3. Salt Poisoning
   With the waterers full of mud, the pigs were deprived of fresh drinking water and even though the feed had a normal level of salt, it was enough to incite a clinical case of salt poisoning. These waterers were cleaned out and other sources of water were provided. There were no further cases and those showing signs of the wandering stage recovered.
