Then In Comes the Smiling Mortician

Janet Brown*
Then In Comes the Smiling

Mortician

—Janet Brown

English, Sr.

The hooray day is here.
Now the shroud is cast off,
a thousand cold winters
and the living of spring are nurtured in the warmth of the sun.
The cat's-eye-marble sky
cannot cool the grass
of the grave of one just dead, and the mourners have returned to bridge parties and movies on a turntable.
The mortician no longer wears his perfect porcelain smile
—it is soaking in suds—and he steps into his White Stag shorts to play tennis in the tingling sun.