Mama

Tara Wendel*

*Iowa State University

Copyright ©1991 by the authors. Sketch is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress).
http://lib.dr.iastate.edu/sketch Mama

She always loved the wild boys. Running pink shell tipped
fingers through their long greasy hair and catching the rebellious spark in their hazel eyes like a cigarette
bouncing and exploding
on the highway,
tossed from a speeding car.
Sneaking out
the bedroom window
as little sisters
watched, giggling,
envious of
Mary Beth,
but scared to death
of their mama’s wooden spoon.
Straddling a motorcycle
at midnight,
lucid street lamps
reflecting in shiny
white go-go boots,
whispering promises
of high school
love with Southern Comfort breath.
My mama
was a wild girl.
Riding alongside the wind, arms wrapped
around the waist
of a father
to be.

-Tara Wendel